Everybody's got one

BY MANDY BOLEN Citizen Staff

ne thing this island does not lack is opin-

Everyone has one. Most of us have at least four that we'll share at a moment's notice. For some, the volume and intensity of these opinions increases in direct proportion to the amount of alcohol or other substances consumed prior to the discussion.

As a writer for the local newspaper, I am often treated to these fierce ideas from our readers, and that's OK. It's my job to listen, and sometimes an impromptu conversation leads to an intriguing story.

Of course, it would be nice if people tried not to fall down while expressing their thoughts about the City Commission, the school district money scandal or the sinking of the Vandenberg.

And criticisms of our local paper — the one that hired me right out of college, and has paid my rent for more than 10 years — lose some credibility when the person speaking has just poured a drink on my flip-flop.

Nevertheless, everyone deserves to be heard.

Some people like what I write, some people don't. Some people like me, some people don't. And that's OK, too, because I don't even like every article I write, and there are some people I believe should be voted permanently off the island.

That said, I know I have a bit of an unfair advantage when it comes to expressing my opinions, and I've used this space, over the past nine years, to share my views and various anecdotes.

I've received more than 200 e-mails from people who like my writing and share my opinion on various matters we've discussed, including parking, commercials, jerks who pick all the cashews out of a bowl of mixed nuts and free ways to enjoy Key West.

That last one, which reminded people that free fun is still possible in these tough times, garnered many positive responses, but also ticked someone off.

I suggested, among other things, fishing from a pier at sunset and wandering through Old Town neighborhoods with a homemade cocktail.

It all seemed pretty innocu-

"I'm seeking magnetic signs

(maybe left over from last year's elections) to use in some experiments I'm doing with magnetism. Please call me at 602-370-2753 (I'm in Key West) if you'd like to give them to me."

"So, the city decides to award a bid to a noncompliant bidder. If the bidder can't get the paperwork correct for a bid submission, how do we know they can get the paperwork correct to permit the project and complete it on time? Particularly disturbing is the omission of the 'anti-kickback affidavit.' I smell a rat, and it smells like the airport terminal fiasco."

"To the genius who wants the Vandenberg sunk in 'water shallow enough for snorkelers to see it, there are restrictions as to how much clearance there needs to be over the top of the ship. Get certified to dive instead!"

"Are we supposed to feel reassured that a private contractor, not the school district, paid for the fancy party for school district staff at the DoubleTree Grand Key? Isn't that exactly the sort of graft that has corrupted Washington and Tallahassee?"

"Why the DoubleTree? Have you ever stayed at one? The DoubleTree cookies are the reason, of course,

"The 1000 block of White Street has turned into a used car lot with all the cars and scooters marked for sale parked there."

"I am shocked and outraged about the offshore drilling in Florida. This is wrong and needs to be stopped. I will not vote for any representative that voted in favor of offshore drilling."

"I feel sorry for all these people getting sucked into buying a house now. Prices are going to drop another 30 percent at least here in the Keys. The worst is yet to come."

"Somebody please investigate incompetence and safety issues at Martin Luther King Community Pool before a child dies. Lifeguards asleep and texting — why is that acceptable?"

"In May, all county employees will be required to attend a class on ethics. I wonder whether the Bubbas will discuss the ethics of demoting good employees so they can keep bad ones. Nonexistent leadership, incompetence and laziness are costing county taxpayers many times what the school district is wasting on cosmetics."

"Why would our legislators vote to allow offshore drilling in our waters you ask? Big campaign contributions would be the answer."

"When will people realize when making a left turn they do not have the right of way. That means to wait until traffic clears to make vour turn."

"Superintendent Acevedo was easily re-elected last fall because he has done an excellent job of improving education. Stop hounding him, let him do his job and let the legitimate investigative processes take their course."

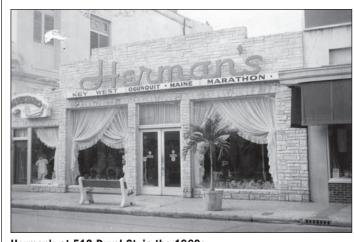

"The national chain that rents movies here in Key West advertises two-day rentals, three-day rentals, four-day rentals, but yet the movie has to be back by noon on the day.

If it says two-day rental, wouldn't that be 48 hours?"

"My comment is on the judge race. How much money are we wasting on this silly race? Many races have been won or lost by fewer votes than this. It's costing the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars."

TODAY IN KEYS HISTORY

Herman's at 512 Duval St. in the 1960s

20 YEARS AGO

Thieves stole 54 of the city's newly planted coco palms from the bridle path on South Roosevelt Boulevard.

A Monroe County corrections officer was fired from his job and arrested for allegedly managing the cock fighting farm on Rockland Key.

Conch Days at the capitol in Tallahassee were celebrated with conch chowder, conch fritters and a 7-foot Key lime pie.

50 YEARS AGO

The city of Key West issued $119,839 in building permits in the last week, the highest weekly total for the year.

Herman's, Herman M. Holtsberg president, was at 512 Duval St. The Navy was holding examinations for career conditional appointments for the position of typist GS-3. The beginning pay was $3,495 a year.

Key West High School baseball player Boog Powell had nine singles, four doubles and three home runs in 28 times at bat, which was 29 bases or a slugging average of 1.038. His batting average for 11 games was .571.

100 YEARS AGO

Robert O. Curry, who died in New York, was buried at St. Paul's Episcopal Church. Mr. Curry was the son of William Curry and one of the owners of Curry and Son Ships Chandlery.

Twenty-five Marines left the Marine Barracks on the Naval Station with orders to the Boston Navy Yard.

Animal Farm is open today

The Monroe County Sheriff's Office Animal Farm will be open to the public from 1 to 3 p.m. today.

Everyone is welcome to visit, for free, the wide variety of animals at the park, including Tina the Key deer, tropical birds, snakes, ferrets, rabbits, horses, ponies, a llama, donkey, goats, sheep, pigs, chickens, ducks, a 100pound tortoise, an emu, albino hedgehog, Patagonian cavies and more. New additions include a kinkajou and a sloth, both natives of the Costa Rican rain forest.

The Animal Farm is at the Stock Island Detention Center, just off College Road. It is open to the public the second and fourth Sunday of every month.

Groups may make special arrangements to visit the farm. Call the Sheriff's Office Detention Center at 305-293-7300 to schedule a visit.

Hometown PAC is asset to community, voters

ometown PAC is off to a good start in its continuing mission to provide convenient forums for candidates who aspire to local elective offices and to provide useful information for citizens who want to know more about issues that may inform their votes when balloting begins.

This year's election cycle kicked off last week. A fullhouse crowd of candidates, prospective candidates and citizens gathered for a meetand-greet session at Salute, the popular eatery on the oceanfront near Higgs Beach. As our readers will know, the proceedings were enlivened by the unscheduled appearance of two topless ladies who bicycled past the crowd, presumably to register their support for creating a clothing optional beach, an issue that only recently came up out of the blue but seems to be gaining a constituency.

We find no cause to object to a little momentary titillation to advocate a cause. It sure beats trying to decipher the dense, lawyerly language of a ballot referendum. We do, however, hope this will not become a regular feature of future candidate forums.

Next up on the schedule will be some events that reflect desirable improvements in how Hometown PAC goes about its business.

The organization no longer will endorse candidates, as it has done in the past. Rather, it will ask candidates to provide biographical information and to respond in writing to questions about significant issues. Responses will be posted on Hometown PAC's Web site (http://www. hometownkevwest.com) so that voters will have convenient access to each candidate's credentials, viewpoints and priorities.

Upcoming forums will be scheduled at various locations in the community that will be as convenient as possible for voters in city commission districts where there is a contest between two or more candidates. Mayoral candidates will be invited to all forums.

At least one more meetand-greet session will be held when the deadline for filing has been reached, but a site for this event has not yet been chosen.

We take pleasure in recognizing that Hometown PAC has strengthened its board of directors to reflect all of the neighborhoods in the city and include well-known business and civic leaders as Membership continues to grow robustly with each election cycle. Membership dues are $20 a year. These funds are needed to cover the costs of booking meeting sites, audio visual equipment and a buffet of light foods that is always served. However, all forums and other events will continue to be open to the public at no charge.

As we have said before mation to inform their voting

Hometown PAC has found its groove as a unique community asset. We hope its membership will continue to grow. Twenty dollars a year for dues is a terrific investment in good government.

Fix financial system; get past the witch hunt

The Monroe County School Board should stop and consider the obvious. Its accounting and record-keeping policies and procedures are primarily at fault for the current financial debacle. I have been a bookkeeper my whole life for both profit and nonprofit organizations, and have never worked under such a system that could fail in such a manner. Basic Bookkeeping 101 introduces the concept of purchase orders and, most important, the checks and balances required to maintain security.

And what about budgets that not only set limitations on expenditures, but establish income projections based on prior years? Certainly cash income from course fees plummeting from $14,000 to $0 should have raised a flag to someone, A permit costs nearly if anyone was watching. Who does your final audit? Why didn't he or she notice the discrepancy? And how could you continue producing so little income?

I could go on, but what is the point? Any estimate of theft should include the fair price for the work involved. salaries paid to those "minding the store." Good bookkeeping policies and procedures are easy to establish, and as anyone could tell you who has ever been under the gun of a good bookkeeper, a pain to follow. This isn't rocket science, people.

And do you honestly think this is the grandfathering, and Code Enforcement is first time an employee has stolen?

So, please, stop before it costs us millions. We taxpayers are already overburdened, and what we really want is to sleep nights knowing this will never happen again. Let's face it, we can't recoup what we have lost. That old "blood out of a stone" quip comes to mind here.

This is your opportunity to shine. Get on with the business of revamping the system, admit to the failure to properly supervise, and perhaps, just perhaps, pardon the guilty.

What we need around here is more honking!

ow that has to be a title that gets your attention. Let me explain.

For five years I lived in Great Falls, Va. Every fall, like clockwork, the geese would fly over my home, which, being from Florida, was quite an event for me. You would always know the geese were coming because you could hear their honking from miles away. As they approached, the honking got louder. If you stood perfectly still while they flew directly overhead, you could hear the rush of wind created by their flapping wings. It was, to use a word we use all too casually these days — awesome! After they passed over, I always listened to them honking off in the distance, a Doppler effect in slow motion.

geese and marveled even more the strictest sense of the word. at them because the complexity of what they were doing was not immediately evident.

A flock of geese flying south doesn't sound like much, but think about the distance and obstacles they encounter. It's a long distance of many miles filled with danger, physical exertion, minute-by-minute decisions of which direction to take and when and where to safely rest. It is not a great stretch of the imagination to think of a flock of geese as a metaphor for any communal structure that you might imagine, such as a family, a country, a state, a city or a company.

A flock of geese is a team

I later found out more about with a common purpose in One goose could probably not make it alone, but together they all make it. They work > together so that each individual effort is shared, and there is a mutual benefit. They look out for each other. Most important, they communicate. The constant honking that you hear and the flying formation of the geese is their way of telling each other when to change direction, speed, leadership and if there is imminent danger. We could all take a great lesson not just from the necessity of communication, but also the need for constancy of

We humans think we are extraordinarily special and above all other life forms. it is arrogance or perhaps it is the greatest joke of all time. We shall see. In any event, my wife's father, the late Cmdr. (retired) Richard Smith, many years ago sent me the following lessons we can learn from geese. If we are not too busy feathering our own nests (alright, I couldn't resist) we would do well to take these lessons under advisement for they are undoubtedly the lessons we need right now more than anything else in our world.

Lessons from geese

1. As each bird flaps its wings, it creates an uplift for others behind it. There is 71 percent more flying range in a

V-formation than flying alone. Lesson: People who share a Perhaps it is deserved, perhaps common direction and sense of common purpose can get there quicker. 2. Whenever a goose flies out of formation, it quickly feels the drag and tries to get back into position. Lesson: It's harder to do something alone than togeth-

3. When the lead goose gets tired, it rotates back into formation and another goose flies at the lead.

Lesson: Shared leadership and interdependence gives us each a chance to lead as well as opportunities to rest.

4. The geese in formation honk from behind to encourage those up ahead to keep up their speed.

Lesson: We need to make sure our honking is encouraging and not discouraging.

5. When a goose gets sick or wounded and falls, two geese fall out and stay with it until it revives or dies. Then they catch up or join another flock.

Lesson: Stand by your colleagues in difficult times as well as in good.

In these troubled times there are great lessons from geese to be emulated in our nation, our state, our city, where we work and most important, at home.

HOROSCOPES

BY BERNICE BEDE OSOL

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Today could be one of those unusual times where it is wiser to trust almost anyone else's judgment over your own, due to a tendency on your part not to trust your common sense.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - A joint venture in which you're presently engaged could be severely damaged if you allow doubt to enter the picture CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) and cause dissension. The arrangement may never be the same.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - Fear of failure could be more damaging to a joint endeavor than anything anyone else might do. More harm could result from unfounded terror than from someone's actions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Make sure that co-workers who equally share the work equally share the benefits as well. Don't think that, just because the job is yours, you are entitled to more. Divide things according to effort applied.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — When it comes to risk taking, this might not be one of your better days. Don't take chances when doing anything dangerous or critical, even if it means doing things the hard way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) - Think twice before making a commitment that could mean disappointing someone who is planning to spend the day with you. Make sure that it will be well worth it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) - If you hope to garner support from a co-worker or an associate, treat him or her as you would a close friend. Anything less might meet with insult or resentment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)

- Disappointment can occur if your expectations for material gain are unreasonable or simply don't live up to reality, either of which will invite feelings of disappointment.

- Reversals are a part of life, so be philosophical about any you might experience at this time. Minimizing the significance will go a long way toward helping you accept what you can't change.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) - It's the end result that is important, not so much whose ideas or tactics got you where you want to be. Acknowledge the person whose thoughts and suggestions brought success.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) - If vou don't carefully monitor expenses on a major project, there's a strong chance you could end up with a serious budget overrun.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - There is a strong possibility that you could make things harder on everyone by acting in an impulsive manner; don't just try to take over and run whatever is happening around you.

Shuffled credit cards are passed along unnoticed

DEAR ABBY

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A few weeks ago, my family and I went to one of our favorite restaurants for lunch. Afterward, I glanced at the check, gave my credit card to the server, signed the receipt and left.

That night I looked at the receipt before filing it away and noticed that the first item listed was for a beer that we hadn't ordered. It was not my check! My daughter suggested that I look at my credit card, and the card wasn't mine, either.

I immediately phoned the credit card company and was told my card had been used for 10 other purchases. They canceled it immediately and said a new card was on the way. In the meantime, my daughter phoned every hotel in the area and eventually located the person who had my card. He was dumbfounded when he looked at the card in his possession and realized it wasn't his.

Please remind your readers that they need to keep an eye on their credit cards and advise employers to do a better job of training their employees. I failed to look at my card in the restaurant when it was returned to me. Not one vendor from whom a purchase was made examined the name on the card and the signature. I admit I made an error, but it was compounded by a multitude of individuals along the way. — ALFRED ON MAUI

DEAR ALFRED: Thank you for the reminder about how important it is to take a moment to check to ensure that the credit card you are handed back is your own. It is also wise to carefully review the restaurant tab when it arrives because mistakes can happen — as I have learned from personal experience.

One day, my husband and I were having a light brunch at a neighborhood restaurant. When our bill came — it was for $22.30 — my husband looked at it as he always does. When the credit card receipt was handed to him for his signature, he looked at it, exclaimed, "This is the most expensive brunch we've ever had!" and passed it to me. We had been charged $2,230. When he showed the receipt to the owner, the man immediately went to the cashier — who informed him that a key had "stuck" when she tried to push it. Many establishments encourage their servers to address customers by name when they bring a check to the table. Not only is it friendlier, it can also avert a mix-up. However, a restaurant should not be blamed entirely for a screw-up like this one because the ultimate responsibility lies with the person being handed the credit card. Because many of them look alike, the better part of wisdom is to check to ensure it is your own before putting it away. DEAR ABBY: I have been invited to a bridal shower for my future sister-in-law and her sister. They are both being married, and a "joint shower" is being held for them. I have never met my future sister-inlaw's sister. Should I buy a gift for her, even though I don't know her? — SHOWER FOR TWO

DEAR SHOWER FOR TWO: To buy your future sister-inlaw's sister a token gift would be a warm and generous way to acknowledge that she is becoming a member of your extended family. Are you obligated to do it? No. Should you do it anyway? Mm-hmm. Trust

Glynn R. Archer Elementary School students and teachers celebrated Earth Day Wednesday. The school's "Green Team" showed off its outdoor tiki hut makeover.

The principal said, "Thank you, Mrs. Roblin, and fellow Glynn Archer Tigers. Keep up the good 'green' work!"

Among the many activities the classes used to celebrate Earth Day, Mrs. Riley's class experimented with making their own recycled paper. Mrs. Pope and 21st Century class also hosted a family reading night and planted seeds to make it a happy Earth Day.

dergarteners even got into the act. They took an Earth Day walking field trip down Seminary Street in Key West den and The ReMARCable (MARC House) plant store. "Butterflies were everywhere," said Glynn Archer student

Dancing Classrooms

Marathon Middle School eighth-grade students and Stanley Switlik Elementary School's fifth-graders participated in the Dancing Classrooms pilot program. The research-based dance and socializing program began in January for fifth- and eighthgrade Marathon students. This program was made possible through the Educational Coalition for Monroe County, the nonprofit arm of the school district. It's also sponsored in part by a grant from the Florida Division of Cultural Affairs and the Florida Keys Council of the Arts. The Marathon Middle eighth-grade Dancing Classrooms demonstration is Wednesday at 6 p.m. in the Marathon High School auditorium. Stanley Switlik Elementary School's fifthgrade class will demonstrate its dancing skills at 9:20 a.m. Thursday in the cafeteria. This 🌼 is an opportunity for the students to show off the new skills they acquired through their 20 dance lessons.

Key Largo student wins essay contest

You are on a school bus and one of the kids is kicked out of his or her seat and made fun of by another student. What would you do?

That's the query eighthgraders across the school district were asked to answer in an essay contest sponsored by the Monroe County Community Safety Task Force. Designed as preparatory work for those eighth-graders taking the Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test this year, all eighth-graders were involved, whether in public, private or home-school settings.

Stefana Valpotic of Key Largo School was the overall winner of the contest. She received a $100 prize from the Interfaith Ministerial Alliance. Entries were judged by the Marathon Business and Professional Women and the Key West Women's Club.

"We received essays from Key Largo School, Sugarloaf School and Mary Immaculate Star of the Sea School," said Cynthia Rubenstein, chair of the task force. "We thought it was a pretty good showing for our first year. We hope to make this an annual event and get more schools involved."

Rachael Norquoy of Mary Immaculate Star of the Sea School, Shelbi Swanson of Sugarloaf School, and Jackie Lara of Key Largo School also won for their writing skills. Each school winner received two movie passes from Regal Cinemas in Key West, the Marathon Community Theatre and Tavernier Towne Cinemas.

The mission of the contest was the same as that of the task force: Creating Healthy and Non-Violent Community Environments (CHANCE).

KEY WEST HIGH SCHOOL BAND

The Key West High School wind ensemble, under the direction of Ashby Goldstein, received the Otto J. Kraushaar Award from the Florida Bandmaster's Association at the Florida Concert Music Performance Assessment at North Port High School in Sarasota County April 20. The award is only given to high school bands for achieving superior ratings in district marching and concert, state concert and sight-reading music performance assessments. This is the first time this has been accomplished by a Key West High School band since the mid-1970s. Other highlights this school year for student musicians:

• Marching Band: Straight superiors in district assessment

- Color guard: Straight superior ratings from auxiliary assessment
- Wind ensemble: Straight superiors from district and state assessments • Symphonic band: Overall superior in district assessment
- Marching: Grand champions, Crown Jewel Marching Band competition
- Dominic Giardino: Selected for All-State Band
- Dominic Giardino: Superior solo State solo and ensemble in Naples • Nicole Roman: Superior with distinction - state and ensemble in Naples enclosures that held doomed turtles outside the building — today the Turtle Kraals Restaurant & Bar.

The eatery formerly was a turtle canning factory - producing turtle steaks, stock and the ever-popular Key West green turtle soup — until the industry ceased to exist in the 1970s.

In its heydey, the kraals were four times their current size and held hundreds of turtles, according to Donald Wells, who worked as a butcher in the cannery in the 1950s and 60s, and told his story to Malcom.

The original structure fell into the water in 1995, but later was reconstructed with state grant money, she said.

In the Florida Division of Historical Resources' research project, the kraals were excavated and the sediment taken to a vacant lot - now the site of the Steamplant luxury condominiums — where volunteers sifted through the remains of turtles and the industry that threatened their existence. The project yielded thousands of bones, several knife handles, slabs of marble that were used for butchering, glass bottles and even several seemingly inexplicable colored glass marbles.

TIB Bank - Proudly Serving The Keys Since 1974.

Some things last a long time... A good marriage... A great friendship... And in the case of Capt. Skip Bradeen, his relationship with his bank. Capt. Skip became a customer of TIB Bank in 1974, the year the bank was founded, and today, 35-years later, TIB continues to serve his financial needs.

As the owner/operator of Blue Chip Too Charters, Capt. Skip spends his days aboard his 52 ft. Carolina Sport Fisherman taking tourists on offshore adventures. One thing he doesn't want to do is worry about his banking needs. In Capt. Skip's words, "TIB gives me peace of mind so I can go out and enjoy fishing in this tropical paradise."

"Thank you TIB for all you've done for me throughout the years. Happy 35th Birthday!"

Referred to as "friendly" bacterial organism, the term probiotics is actually an ancient remedy for balancing and maintaining a healthy intestinal tract. Prior to refrigeration and processed foods, we used to rely on eating more fermented foods as well as fresh foods which contained "helpful" soil based bacteria. Today we can find some of these "good" bacterias in foods like yogurt, sauerkraut, miso soup, tempeh, and acidophilus milk. The imbalance of the digestive tract can lead to oral symptoms such as rampant decay of the roots of the teeth, coated tongue, and bad breath in addition to intestinal disorders. The friendly bacteria when swallowed, move through the stomach to the intestines to form colonies on the intestinal wall and compete with harmful bacteria, yeast, mold, and virus to take their place. We need them because they balance the pH and assist with absorbing nutrients especially vitamin B3, B6, and folic acid. Therapeutic antibiotics on the other hand destroy both good and bad bacteria. That is why it is best to introduce a probiotic after taking an antibiotic either in your food or by capsule. Ask your Doctor about it, especially when given

CITIZEN STAFF

MIAMI — A select group of athletes on the Key West High track and field team continued their season Saturday afternoon at the Region 4-2A meet at Belen Jesuit Prep.

Phillip Young, Brittney Wagoner, and the Conchs' 4x400 meter relay team of Young, Cale Hartle, Shea Reger and Clive Georges each claimed top-four finishes Saturday and will each move on to next Saturday's state championship meet in Winter Park. To go along with his advancement with the relay team, Young also advanced in the triple jump and 300-meter hurdles. Wagoner moved on to states with top-three finishes in the pole vault, high jump, and triple jump.

"I was really pleased overall," said Conchs coach Dave Perkins, whose team suffered a setback with some injuries on the 4x800 meter relay team. "It was a good effort by everyone, even the ones who didn't advance, and there were a lot of personal bests. I have no

PHILADELPHIA — Sidney Crosby stood near center ice, answering questions from a television reporter while a few lingering fans berated him.

Crosby never flinched. He finished the interview and let the scoreboard do his talking back to the fans.

Sergei Gonchar scored 2:19 into the third period and the Penguins eliminated the Flyers with a 5-3 victory Saturday in Game 6 of the Eastern Conference first-round

"It felt good," said Crosby, who scored the tying goal in the second period and had an empty-netter in the final minute. "We've had huge rivalries over the years. It's a loud building. They were playing well and the crowd was into to it, so to hear a little silence was gratifying."

The Penguins, who beat the Flyers in the conference finals last year, have to wait to find out who they'll play next.

Meanwhile, the Flyers have to wait another year to pursue their first Stanley Cup since 1975.

Ragan wins 1st with late pass at Talladega

TALLADEGA, Ala. — David Ragan earned his first NASCAR victory by passing Ryan Newman right before the finish line in the Nationwide Series race Saturday at Talladega

Ragan won for the first time in 196 starts — 85 in Nationwide — spanning all three of NASCAR's top series.

"We've been waiting for this for a long time," Ragan said. "I didn't know if it would come this weekend or not. A lot of fun. A lot of emotions. We've got 500 miles to do it again tomorrow."

Newman started from the pole and led the field on a final restart for a two-lap sprint to the finish. He had his hands full with Dale Earnhardt Jr., who followed him bumper-to-bumper as he looked for a chance to pass.

But Newman and Earnhardt made contact when Earnhardt tried to dart around him on the final lap. Ragan used some momentum off a push from Joey Logano and squeezed by Newman for the win.

Yep, Wade and the Miami Heat are that hot right now.

Wade finished with 29 points and eight assists, Jermaine O'Neal added 22 points and 10 rebounds, and the Heat extended Atlanta's decade-plus road playoff drought, beating the Hawks, 107-78, Saturday night in Game 3 of their Eastern Conference first-round matchup.

It was over early: Atlanta missed 17 of its first 19 shots, and a 25-6 Heat run to end the first half pushed the lead to 50-29.

"We knew there would be a lot of energy in the feet shy of the rim. building, so we played off that early," Wade said. "And defensively we came out very tough."

Josh Smith, Al Horford and Mike Bibby scored 13 apiece for Atlanta, which is 0-12 in road playoff games since May 8, 1997, losing all but one ing minutes, then a high-rising effort to swat by at least 10 points.

The Heat lead the series 2-1 and host Game 4 Monday night.

"No more excuses," Horford said. "We're going to have to bring it fuego on Monday."

When teams split the first two games of an NBA series, the Game 3 winner advances 76 percent of the time. And in recent years, the edge MIAMI — Dwyane Wade swished a 3-pointer, has been even more pronounced — of the last ner ultimately prevailed on 22 occasions.

That's a bad sign for the Hawks.

"By any means, we're not out of it," Hawks coach Mike Woodson said. "But we can't come out and give effort like we did tonight. I just thought the Heat did everything that they were supposed to do and we just didn't answer the bell tonight."

Before the game, the Hawks learned starting small forward Marvin Williams would sit out with a wrist injury. Their first shot of the night was from Horford, a 15-foot jumper that fell 2

It only got worse from there, especially with Wade at his highlight-reel best.

Defensively, he set the tone with a two-hand erasure of a shot by Mo Evans in the openan offering from Zaza Pachulia into the most expensive seats late in the third. Plus, he had dunks over two of the Hawks' biggest challengers — Smith got out of Wade's way on one, and Horford offered little resistance on another.

When fishing, look for fish, not structure

BY C.J. GEOTIS Citizen Fishing Columnist

This column is dedicated to the recreational fisherperson who wants to have a good time, get the boat wet, spend time with friends and family, and maybe catch a couple fish.

have a new secret. Actually, it's an old secret, I just remembered it again. I was Latishing with a friend one day; he is a commercial fisherman, and the most knowledgeable fisherman I know. As we were looking at the depthfinder, and getting ready to throw the anchor, I spotted a tremendous looking structure (rocks, coral heads and ridges) on the bottom. "There it is, there it is," I said, "That's the spot we're looking for."

"That would be a great place to fish, if you were hoping to catch structure and rocks," he replied, "But we're looking to catch fish, so let's circle this area and find them."

Sure enough, not more than 100 feet away we started marking fish among the rocks and bottom features. We threw the hook (that's the anchor for the landlubbers among you) and put four blocks of chum out. In a short period of time, we could actually watch the fish — on the electronic chart — moving out of the rocks and making their way up in the water-column in pursuit of our chum. Fish show up on fishfinders as inverted cones, or when there is a whole school as blobs on the chart. On color fish-finders, the color of those cones or blobs changes. The bigger fish, or the denser bodies of fish, will show up as red. Sometimes you can pass an area holding fish and see light-blue and yellow fish marks. Keep slowly circling that area and you could very well find an area of red marks and blobs. This is where you want to be.

More experienced captains can actually tell the species of fish their fish-finders are showing, just by looking at the color and form of the marks on their screens. If you learn to use your fish-finder, this may involve reading the instruction book. You can tell precisely what the bottom of the area you are looking at is made of, such as sandy or rocky, hard or soft, etc. Passing over large rocks, you will see fish holding near them or beside them. Depending on which side of the rocks you see the fish, this will indicate which way the current is running at the bottom of the water column; the fish will stay on the protected side so they don't have to keep swimming just to stand still. Many times there will be wind moving things on the surface in a different direction than the current is moving things on the bottom. I have been anchored on one side of a rock grouping and not raised fish, then moved to the other side and brought the fish to the boat. It doesn't seem fair that it is this difficult — but get over it — that's just the way it is, and knowing this is why some people catch more fish than others.

But, I digress. Back to the new secret. I was cruising over an area that I pass by on the way to my favorite yellowtail spot. Friends had told me they've been fishing this area with good results lately. I remember spending time in this area looking for fish and not finding any in the past. I decided to look again. After a short period of exploring, the fish-finder was marking structure as it had before, but this time, the structure was dotted with cones and blobs - red cones and blobs. "This looks great," I yelled to my fishing buddies, "Let's give it a shot." We put out a block of chum and started catching legal yellowtails one right after another. This was great. The water depth was only around 40 feet and the vellowtails were getting bigger. My friends and I don't keep fish that we are not going to eat right away. So, with a mess of yellowtails in the cooler, we decided to move to slightly deeper water and look around for more "fishy" areas.

C.J. GEOTIS/The Citizen

This shallow-water screen-shot was a surprise, but worked out extremely well.

We got to 60 feet of water and, sure enough, more fish on the bottom. After we threw the anchor, I noticed that there were some left-over chum pieces in the chum basket. My buddy, Larry, uses a metal basket with smaller holes than the one I use, and it had trapped some larger pieces of chum inside. Instead of throwing this away, I kept it. We put out a new basket of chum and prepared to fish. I was using my regular tackle, 20-pound fluorocarbon and green Cy's Flies, which I find to be a deadly combo when drifted back in a chum slick. This time, instead of squid strips, I put pieces from the chum on the hook. Almost instantly, the line started peeling from the reel. I set the hook and we netted one of the biggest mangrove snappers I have ever seen. "That was just a fluke," my jealous boat-mates exclaimed. However, they had no comment when, two minutes later, another piece of chum attracted and landed a gorgeous 21-inch mutton snapper. "Cat got your tongues, boys? What was that about a fluke? Don't you guys want to catch anything, too? Would you guys like to buy a Cy's Fly for $50?" You get the idea; they deserved it.

I love fishing. I love catching. And, I love the teasing. But, only when I am the "tease-or" and not the "tease-ee." Obviously, I was having an excellent time. Then, just as is so common in fishing...the bite died. No big deal, we had our limit of fresh fish, we had a great time, we logged a couple of new way points in the GPS and we teased each other unmercifully. What could be better?

Now, back to the new secret, for the last time. I had a chance to fish that area again. We were marking fish and using the chum basket that left the big pieces of chum. I put several different pieces of the chum on a green Cy's Fly and gave it a whirl. Nothing. No bites. No bragging rights. I replaced the chum pieces with my usual squid strip, and six nice yellowtails came to the boat. This is not what I had expected, but I will take it. As my buddies in Orlando use to say, "Such is life in the world of the fisherman."

Keep fishing, keep trying things, watch your fish-finder — and look for fish — not structure. And, don't forget, life is good in the Florida Keys.

NOTICE OF HEARING TO IMPOSE AND PROVIDE FOR COLLECTION OF NON-AD VALOREM ASSESSMENTS

Notice is hereby given that the Key Largo Wastewater Treatment District Board of Commissioners will conduct a public hearing to consider imposition of non-ad valorem assessments against certain parcels of real property located within the District. The hearing will be held at 4:00 p.m., or as soon thereafter as the matter can be heard, on May 19. 2009 at the District office located at 98880 Overseas Highway, Key Largo, Florida, for the purpose of receiving public comment on the proposed assessments.

In accordance with the Americans with Disabilities Act, persons needing special accommodation or an interpreter to participate in this proceeding should contact the District Clerk, Carol Walker, at 305-453-5804 at least 3 days prior to the hearing.

All affected real property owners have a right to appear at the hearing and/or to file written comments with the District within 20 days of this notice. If a person wishes to appeal any decision made by the District with respect to any matter considered at the hearing, such person will need a record of the proceedings, and may need to ensure that a verbatim record is made, including the testimony and evidence upon which the appeal is to be made.

The assessments have been proposed to recover a portion of the capital costs of District wastewater management facilities constructed, and to be constructed, within the District. The amount of the assessment imposed upon each parcel will be calculated under and in accordance with the resolution adopting System Development Charges at the District Board meeting of July 20, 2005 and the 2009 Preliminary Assessment Resolution adopted at the District Board meeting of April 21, 2009. Copies of these resolutions and supporting documents are available for inspection and copying at the District office located at 98880 Overseas Highway, Key Largo.

The special assessments will be collected by the Monroe County Tax Collector in annual payments on the ad valorem tax bill, as authorized by Section 197.3632, Florida Statutes. Failure to pay the assessments will cause a tax certificate to be issued against the real property, which may result in loss of title.

The District intends to collect the assessments in 20 annual assessments, the first of which will be included on the ad valorem tax bill to be mailed in November 2009. Future assessments may be prepaid in their entirety at the option of the property owner.

If you have any questions, please contact the District Clerk at 305-453-5804, Monday through Friday between 9:00 a.m. and 4:00 pm.

NOTICE OF HEARING TO IMPOSE AND PROVIDE FOR COLLECTION OF NON-AD VALOREM ASSESSMENTS

Notice is hereby given that the Key Largo Wastewater Treatment District Board of Commissioners will conduct a public hearing to consider imposition of non-ad valorem assessments against certain parcels of real property located within the District. The hearing will be held at 4:00 p.m., or as soon thereafter as the matter can be heard, on May 19, 2009 at the District office located at 98880 Overseas Highway, Key Largo, Florida, for the purpose of receiving public comment on the proposed assessments.

In accordance with the Americans with Disabilities Act. persons needing special accommodation or an interpreter to participate in this proceeding should contact the District Clerk, Carol Walker, at 305-453-5804 at least 3 days prior to the hearing.

All affected real property owners have a right to appear at the hearing and/or to file written comments with the District within 20 days of this notice. If a person wishes to appeal any decision made by the District with respect to any matter considered at the hearing, such person will need a record of the proceedings, and may need to ensure that a verbatim record is made, including the testimony and evidence upon which the appeal is to be made.

The assessments have been proposed to recover a portion of the capital costs of District wastewater management facilities constructed, and to be constructed, within the District. The amount of the assessment imposed upon each parcel will be calculated under and in accordance with the resolution adopting System Development Charges at the District Board meeting of July 20, 2005 and the 2009 Preliminary Assessment Resolution adopted at the District Board meeting of April 21, 2009. Copies of these resolutions and supporting documents are available for inspection and copying at the District office located at 98880 Overseas Highway, Key Largo.

The special assessments will be collected by the Monroe County Tax Collector in annual payments on the ad valorem tax bill, as authorized by Section 197.3632, Florida Statutes. Failure to pay the assessments will cause a tax certificate to be issued against the real property, which may result in loss of title.

The District intends to collect the assessments in 20 annual assessments, the first of which will be included on the ad valorem tax bill to be mailed in November 2009. Future assessments may be prepaid in their entirety at the option of the property owner.

If you have any questions, please contact the District Clerk at 305-453-5804, Monday through Friday between 9:00 a.m. and 4:00 pm.

NOTICE OF HEARING TO IMPOSE AND PROVIDE FOR COLLECTION OF NON-AD VALOREM ASSESSMENTS

Notice is hereby given that the Key Largo Wastewater Treatment District Board of Commissioners will conduct a public hearing to consider imposition of non-ad valorem assessments against certain parcels of real property located within the District. The hearing will be held at 4:00 p.m., or as soon thereafter as the matter can be heard, on May 19, 2009 at the District office located at 98880 Overseas Highway, Key Largo, Florida, for the purpose of receiving public comment on the proposed assessments.

In accordance with the Americans with Disabilities Act. persons needing special accommodation or an interpreter to participate in this proceeding should contact the District Clerk, Carol Walker, at 305-453-5804 at least 3 days prior to the hearing.

All affected real property owners have a right to appear at the hearing and/or to file written comments with the District within 20 days of this notice. If a person wishes to appeal any decision made by the District with respect to any matter considered at the hearing, such person will need a record of the proceedings, and may need to ensure that a verbatim record is made, including the testimony and evidence upon which the appeal is to be made.

The assessments have been proposed to recover a portion of the capital costs of District wastewater management facilities constructed, and to be constructed, within the District. The amount of the assessment imposed upon each parcel will be calculated under and in accordance with the resolution adopting System Development Charges at the District Board meeting of July 20, 2005 and the 2009 Preliminary Assessment Resolution adopted at the District Board meeting of April 21, 2009. Copies of these resolutions and supporting documents are available for inspection and copying at the District office located at 98880 Overseas Highway, Key Largo.

The special assessments will be collected by the Monroe County Tax Collector in annual payments on the ad valorem tax bill, as authorized by Section 197.3632, Florida Statutes. Failure to pay the assessments will cause a tax certificate to be issued against the real property, which may result in loss of title.

The District intends to collect the assessments in 20 annual assessments, the first of which will be included on the ad valorem tax bill to be mailed in November 2009. Future assessments may be prepaid in their entirety at the option of the property owner.

If you have any questions, please contact the District Clerk at 305-453-5804, Monday through Friday between 9:00 a.m. and 4:00 pm.

Jennifer Bodnar, 37, finished in 43:48. It was her third time competing in the run.

"I just wanted to beat my previous time, and I was able to do that, so I was happy," she said. "I'm just happy to be out here running and to be able to race. It was a great feeling."

Bodnar said she had just one thought after crossing the finish line.

"I'm glad it's over," she said with a smile. "It's been a long journey."

In all, 1,500 compeitors aged 8-78 raced in the event, which started in 1982.

"This race is not really about winning, or at least it isn't to me," Jason Bodnar said. "It's more about all 1,500 people competing and having a good time. It's a great celebration of the sport and what we do."

He also had a little added motivation to win, however.

Our WWII 'burden'

BY RICK BOETTGER

Special to The Citizen

he recent tax day "tea bag" protests were controversial, but even opponents agreed about two seemingly undeniable facts: The growing national debt is an unsustainable burden to our grandchildren/children, and that no nation can borrow and spend itself to prosperity.

Today I will deny these fallacies. Further, I want to warn you that our greatest danger is believing and acting badly because of them.

World War II is a single example that disproves both. Our national debt quintupled — yes, became five times as big in four years. If you're worried about a "burden" to anyone's children and grandchildren, well hey, we are the children and grandchildren of that Greatest Generation, who defeated the Nazis and Japan.

That generation never "paid off" the $288 billion it cost to win WWII. Folks, that number and this terrible world they left us are the so-called "burdens" we have to bear. Isn't it horrible? We're stuck with 55 years of being the most powerful, successful and generous nation on earth, defenders of freedom and the envy of all. Alternatively, we could have saved the $288 billion and all be speaking German now, rich with memories of our fiscal responsibility in the 1940s.

The point is not the debt number; it is what you buy with it. Zimbabwe's debt buys Swiss bank accounts for its leaders. Thus they're collapsing. Our debt wins wars, builds schools, improves medical coverage, repairs infrastructure, encourages renewable energy and employs idle millions. That makes us greater.

Who had that much money to lend us in those cataclysmic times? No one. We in fact borrowed it from ourselves, mostly by the Federal Reserve issuing bonds which it then bought itself with newly created money. They wrote checks they freshly printed themselves, at low interest rates for the duration of the war. We borrowed and spent ourselves into prosperity then, and it's what we're doing again today.

It's neither a trick nor magic. The simple fact is, our money is sound because of our immense national wealth of things to buy. We and the international free enterprise system we built has abundantly created all of the food, shelter, vacations, hospitals and entertainment anyone could want, and then some. That is why the government can and indeed should print and spend more money while lowering our taxes.

The only "burden" will be some scary big numbers called "debt" or "money supply," while the reward will be a stronger, healthier, safer nation whose citizens have good jobs and decent retirement plans.

What can stop us? If too many people falsely believe the sky is falling, they can create a completely unnecessary panic

TIB Ban makes the list

Florida Trend magazine recently released the names of Florida's top 50 bank holding companies in its April issue. TIB Financial Corp., a subsidiary of TIB Bank, ranked No. 27, based on statistical information obtained from the Florida Bankers Association.

TIB Financial Corp. is a financial services company with approximately $1.9 billion in total assets and 28 full-service banking offices throughout the Florida Keys, Homestead, Naples, Bonita Springs, Fort Myers, Cape Coral, Nokomis and Venice. TIB Financial Corp. is also the parent company of Naples Capital Advisors Inc.

TIB Bank, the lead bank of the holding company, was established in 1974 originally as The Islamorada Bank. As the bank expanded throughout the Keys and Southwest Florida, the bank was renamed TIB Bank.

"We have the people and the resources to meet the economic needs of our customers, both now and in the future, which is why we are pleased our efforts have been effective for our customers and our shareholders, as evidenced by our ranking within the state of Florida," said Tom Longe, chairman, CEO and president.

Bank lends elbow grease

First State Bank of the Florida Keys volunteers helped raise more than $800 for AIDS Help Inc. by washing cars for the SMART Ride campaign, an annual bicycle trip from Miami to Key West that raises funds and awareness for AIDS.

"Many thanks to our friends from First State Bank who time and time again devote their weekends to help us," said AIDS Help Event Coordinator David Harer. "The success of this car wash can be directly attributed to First State Bank of the Florida Keys."

THE KEY WEST CITIZEN ◆ SUNDAY, APRIL 26, 2009

That's a wrap

BY LESLIE LINSLEY
Special to The Citizen

As the Key West season is just winding down I thought you might like to hear from an outsider how your community has fared. It's a loose consensus, but it was pretty positive.

The home furnishing stores reported business slightly higher than the same time last year, and so I am looking forward to the same sort of results here in Nantucket. This is what visitors from all over the country were buying for their homes:

Decorative pillows were high on the list followed by quilted throws, small occasional pieces of furniture, small accessories such as trays, candleholders and unusual vases for entertaining. Handmade crafts such as pottery were reportedly "hot" for a three-dimensional art piece to display, but more for function.

Useful objects were more desirable, but people liked the idea of having something handmade to hold everyday objects rather than something from Kmart that could serve the same purpose. For example, handmade ceramic coffee mugs, while more expensive than those from Pier 1 Imports, provide a more enjoyable experience, look good on a shelf, and purchasing a handmade mug isn't such a great expense for this small pleasure.

When interviewed, one knowledgeable owner of a rather nice home-style store told me that customers are staying home more, nesting and entertaining more than going out for dinner as often as they used to. In this regard they are assessing their homes and adding or replacing items that seem tired.

"It's an inexpensive way to upgrade your lifestyle and still have fun shopping," said one store owner.

"A really nice throw pillow or quilt is a relatively inexpensive way to give a room a lift," said Patty O'Conner, owner of Key Accents, one of my regular haunts.

Maxine Makover, owner of Knit Wits Key West, an upscale yarn shop on Whitehead Street, reported a better February than last year. It seems that when people stay home more they enjoy making something for themselves.

"The higher-end yarns were most popular," she said, explaining that people on vacation look for something unusual and perhaps more exotic than the run-of-the-mill. Cruises devoted to knitters gave her store a boost as well.

"It's amazing, but knitters are quite dedicated and will do their homework, seeking out a yarn shop wherever they travel," she

She also provides a brilliant service called "The Knit Express," a "quickie" class for those on the run.

On the art scene: The galleries, for the most part, reported healthy sales. Local artist Debra Yates had a very successful show of her new works at Lucky Street Gallery in March. Local artists, those with a following, did particularly well.

Betsy Dietz, who ran the art auction to benefit Aids Help Inc. at the Casa Marina Resort, said that while there were fewer participants than in past years, the buying was brisk and the paintings by local artists were gobbled up for good prices. I was in attendance and the audience of buyers was enthusiastic — no coaxing needed. Lynn Sherman's painting was one of the highlights and satisfied both the charity and the lucky buyer. A good sign that even in a slow economy people will turn out for a good

The prevailing attitude from gallery owners is that people on vacation want to take home a reminder of the place they are visiting, and small works in particular are desirable as a way to downsize in the economy without compromising taste. They don't have to be shipped, and one can always find a place to hang them.

Local folks continue to support the arts, and the art scene is vibrant and active in T's easy to wander by Southard Square and miss the residential compound tucked into the mature garden of what used to be dePoo Hospital. Even old-timers do double takes at the former two-floor, cinder-block structure that was built in 1958 and developed by Mark Barnett in 1985.

Back then, its appearance shifted as much as its use when he added a third floor with two front-gable roofs; when he stuccoed exterior walls and replaced a dirt parking lot with big decks and fences and brick pathways; and when he moved the administration building back 8 feet from Southard Street and turned the old purchasing department house at the rear of the property into the compound's pool house.

See CONDOS, page 2D

Condos created from former hospital through adaptive reuse

The former dePoo Hospital's purchasing department building is now the Southard Square compound's community pool house.

The open floor plan features a wall of glass sliding doors.

In short, when Mark Barnett converted the 34-bed hospital at 908-918 Southard Street into 18 condominiums, he was at the forefront of the "green building" curve. By revamping the old materials and energy into private residences (following dePoo's move to Kennedy Drive), the adaptive reuse theory maintains that everyone is a winner: Barnett the developer, who retains a mid-20thcentury building and makes money by doing so; the condo owners, who buy into an updated piece of old Key West; the historic neighborhood that retains its flavor, and of course, the planet because less fuel was needed to transport fewer materials to the island, plus fewer trees were cut down to build something from scratch.

"I'm proud of what Mark did here; it's a quality project," said his mother, Marilyn Barnett, who has lived in one of the first-floor condos since Southard Square opened in late 1986. "The apartments toward the back are where the surgery department was, and the ICU was next to it."

Marilyn should know, and not just because her son developed the property. She was dePoo Hospital's first registered dietician, and as she strolled the path to the compound's gated side entrance, she pointed to five condos that front Griffin Lane: "Basically, that's where I used to work in the kitchen and cafeteria," she

Each of the condominiums is iniquely designed — some as townhouses, some with two or three bedrooms, some with more than one entry, although all have separate entrances with private patios or balconies. Marilyn's one-bedroom/ 1 ½bath condo is located on the ground floor near the central entrance to Southard Square. The lush tropical foliage almost hides the big stucco arch to her covered patio.

"The plants offer additional privacy, but the residences are already positioned for that," she said. "I spend a good deal of time on the patio, but the glass sliding doors let me feel like I'm in the garden even when I'm sitting indoors."

The interior arrangement of the open living-and-dining floor plan features a front window wall with solid side walls that give way to a hall, which runs the length of the apartment. From the hall is entry to the half bath/utility room, and to the kitchen, where one wall of the compact and galley-like kitchen forms a counter that spans almost the entire width of the dining room. Rattan stools at the counter serve informal dining, while a rattan table with glass top affords formal dining.

The airy ambiance of rattan furniture is ever present in side tables and chairs, but some pieces such as the 6-foot Tommy Bahama desk and matching bookshelf create heavier focal points. Their dark woods contrast with the soft green sofa and the light tile floors that run throughout the 800-square-foot condo.

"Because there are only a few windows in this particular design, I selected the off-white floor tiles to brighten the space," Marilyn Barnett said. "Everything is pretty much original to what Mark installed 24 years ago — for instance, the black appliances in the kitchen — but I do make periodic changes to the furniture or artwork."

The long hallway is a natural gallery for Marilyn Barnett's art collection, which features some pieces painted by her daughter, Debbie. But another décor shift is eminent when Barnett returns a roll-top desk her son Steven made when he was 16.

"He designed and made the entire desk — everything, including the slats on the roll top," she said. "It will be his again one day. I just can't give

The desk anchors the corner wall of the dining-living area where the hallway begins. It ends at the bedroom, which is only slightly smaller than the living area in front. Lots of closets with shutter doors line one wall, and an unusual mirrored shower door in the master bath adds the illusion of space to an already spacious 16-by-13-foot room.

Teddy, Barnett's mini guard dog, has been the silent, but ever-observant tour director during the apartment walk-through.

"He's the star around here," she said. "I don't worry about him barking or disturbing neighbors. It's really quiet because these old hospital walls are so thick."

As if to reinforce the win-win situation, Teddy applies his own special brand of adaptive reuse: First he curls up on a white fur rug in the bathroom, and as the urge hits him, shifts to a green one next to the king-size bed.

All the condos in Southard Square have private entrances and patios or balconies.

Key West with Thursday night openings not only in galleries but public buildings, offices and even the local gyms located within walking distance of one another. I thought this was a good idea because there is more opportunity to show paintings in settings other than hanging in the galleries.

What I sensed as a serious shopper who spent a lot of time perusing the stores, watching buying patterns and talking to shop owners is that there were fewer shoppers, but they were all buying something. Less crowded stores made the shopping experience more enjoyable, and shop owners and their help were cheerful and accommodating, never overly pushy or exuding an air of desperation. (Please note, I did not go into souvenir or T-shirt shops.)

People were not asking for discounts or for lower prices, as the media would have us believe. They were polite and seemed to be mimicking the optimistic attitude of our new president. It is obvious that Americans love to shop, especially while on vacation. It makes us happy, and in a small way we are doing our part to stimulate the economy. We can always justify it if we feel we are getting good value. The days of willy-nilly spending may be over, but smart shoppers are emerging and that's a good

Find right plant for the right place at tree giveaway

BY ROBIN ROBINSON Key West Garden Club

aturday is the 15th annual Keys Energy Services Tree

Giveaway event. That means two free native trees or bushes for every citizen who has electricity if they show up at 8:30 a.m. at the KEYS service building, 1001 James St.

This project is part of a nationwide program called TREE POWER sponsored by the American Public Power Association. The goal is to plant one tree for every customer. To date, customers have planted more than 32,000 native trees. KEYS has improved our landscape and saved us money by reducing our energy use.

To help you plan to put the right plant in the right place, here's the list of the bushes and trees to be given away this year. All of these natives are enjoyed by birds, bees and butterflies. Some are threatened or endangered. They will weather the hurricanes and come back, just like we do.

Bushes:

Bahama senna (Senna

Mexicana var. chapmanii): It's a fast-growing, 6-foot by 6foot, lanky bush that likes sun to light shade. Also known as Bahama cassia, it has glorious yellow flowers all year, and is evergreen and drought and wind tolerant. It needs pruning but seeds readily. It has no pests and attracts sulfur butterflies.

Bay cedar (Suriana maritima): This threatened, slowgrowing, 8-foot by 6-foot shrub prefers full sun and has tiny yellow flowers. It is drought, salt and wind tolerant, and needs few nutrients. The bay cedar can be easily trimmed and also has no pests. Most in the Florida Keys survived Hurricane Wilma.

American beautyberry (Callicarpa americana): This variety is fast growing, likes full sun to light shade, and will reach about 8 feet by 8 feet in size. It has insignificant flowers and showy purple seeds. The beautyberry is moderately tolerant of salt, wind and water, but it has a high drought toler-

Firebush (Hamelia patens): It's a fast-growing bush that can reach a size of 20 feet by 8 feet. It prefers full sun to light shade, has year-round, showy, red flowers, black seeds, and is evergreen. It has high drought, wind and salt tolerance. The easily pruned firebush has no pests, attracts butterflies and also survived Hurricane Wilma.

Locustberry (Byrsonima Lucida): Another Wilma survivor, the locustberry experiences moderate growth and averages about 12 feet by 12 feet in size, but can be 30 feet depending on soil. It is easily pruned, has showy spring flowers, prefers full sun to light shade, has no pests and attracts butterflies. This evergreen bush has moderate tolerance to salt, wind and water but high tolerance for drought.

Trees:

Black ironwood

(Krugiodendron ferreum): Also knowns as leadwood, the black ironwood has very slow growth, reaching approximately 20 feet by 10 feet in size. It has inconspicuous flowers with copious nectar and edible, sweet fruit. It will do well in full sun to light shade, and has moderate salt water and wind tolerance (it also survived Hurricane Wilma) and high drought tolerance. The Cuban May beetle eats its Blolly (Guapira discolor): This tree experiences moderate growth and will reach 25 feet by 15 feet in size. The blolly, an evergreen, has droopy branches, inconspicuous flowers and red berries in ance. It needs pruning and has late summer. It prefers full sun to light shade, thrives on some organic soil content, has high salt, wind and water tolerance, moderate drought tolerance, and survived Wilma on the beach.

Geiger tree (Cordia sebestena): It has a moderate growth rate, reaching 25 feet by 20 feet in size. Also an evergreen, the geiger tree has large, rough leaves and showy, orange flowers all year. Thriving in full sun, the tree has a high saltwater, wind and drought tolerance. Geiger beetles will eat its leaves.

Smooth strongback (Bourreria succulenta): Also known as the Bahama strongbark, this endangered tree species experiences moderate growth, reaching 15 feet by 12 feet in size. It exhibits semishowy, white flowers all year, bright-orange drupe and is an evergreen. It likes full sun to light shade and thrives on some organic content. It has moderate salt, wind and water tolerance and high drought tolerance.

Spanish stopper (Eugenia foetida): With slow to moderate growth, the tree will reach approximately 15 feet by 15 feet in size. Another evergreen, it has semi-showy, white flowers and brown berries. It does well in full sun to light shade, but its soil needs organic content. The tree is moderately saltwater and drought tolerant. Another Wilma survivor, it has high salt and wind tolerance and no known pests.

Spicewood (Calyptranthes pallens): This threatened variety experiences slow to moderate growth, reaching 20 feet by 10 feet in size. It has semi-showy, white flowers in spring and fall, and a fragrant, dark-red berries. Preferring light shade to full sun, it also has low salt, wind and water tolerance — although it survived Wilma — and moderate drought tolerance.

Wild lime (Zanthoxylum fagara): The wild lime is a fastgrowing, evergreen tree with inconspicuous, white flowers and black seeds. It can grow to about 15 feet by 2 feet in size, and is usually multi-trunked with sharp, hooked spines and aromatic leaves. The highly salt-, wind- and drought-tolerant tree prefers full sun and sandy or limestone soil. It has no pests.

More detailed information on each plant can be found on the Key West Garden Club Web site at http://www.keywestgardenclub.com. Click News, then Mondays. Gardening Tips, then Citizen Columns and look for individual plant names.

We can all be a part of going green with our landscaping. To conserve energy, plant these shade trees and bushes on the south, west or east sides of your home. Shade your vulnerable windows and airconditioning units. Plant your shrubs close to the walls to keep them cool.

Chief Taylor: County Did Not Receive $1 Million Grant

Dear Editor:

Just a note to thank you for the article in Solares Hill ["Prison: An Opportunity Going to Waste," April 19]. Your coverage of this important topic is deeply appreciated.

I did want to provide you with some critical corrections, as I know that accuracy is something you value and you would not want misinformation to be communicated. With regards to the cost of housing inmates, the daily rate is dependent upon the number of inmates housed in the jail at any given time. Although the fee to the federal government for federal prisoners is $82 per day, the cost to the county for an inmate day varies on a daily basis, according to the total number of inmates present, between $65 and $85.

The county's detainee

In our issue of April 30, 1999, Alyson Crean reported on the high price of a Key West hotel room. "Key West Rates Higher Than Most Caribbean Resorts" went the headline.

"During high season, visitors to the island will pay anywhere from $114 per night for a utilitarian motel room away from the water [Econolodge] to upwards of $1,400 per night for complete waterfront luxury [Pier House].

"A night at the Casa Marina or the Reach Resort, both Marriott properties, will run between $295 and $695 per night. A night in the Nassau Bahamas Marriott property will cost from $169 to $299.

"A Key West Best Western runs from $179 to $239 per night while a similar room in New York City costs $75 to $125. (The Waldof Astoria offers rooms for $280 'and up.') "Visitors to Key West can enjoy the waterfront at the Galleon for somewhere between $175 and $495 per night. Waterfront luxury in Lake Tahoe ranges from $79 to $120 per night.

"Throughout the Caribbean, hotel rooms begin around $75 and top out at $400, with most falling in the range of

"Matt Babich, president of the Key West Hotel Motel Association, while noting that Key West is an expensive place to do business, said "the success of our market shows that we are not over-priced. Our challenge is as a destination as a whole, to create a better product. People find the things here they can't find in their real lives. To remain successful, we need to see that guests are safe, that we offer a unique, clean community, protect our natural environment and give good service."

An Earth Day Call to Keep Our Trash Away From Animals

By Dona DeMaria and Maya Totman

ow many people can say they live on a chain of islands? Not many at all, which is why these wonderful islands should be kept in pristine condition.

If the Florida Keys keep getting treated like they are now, then there will no longer be anything special about it. Has anyone gone anywhere and not seen trash? This is a huge problem in the Keys, both on our lands and in our waters. Plastics and PVC, motor oil and gasoline, Styrofoam, pesticides and poisons—all are thoughtlessly discarded and a threat to our wildlife.

Littering is one of Earth's greatest environmental problems and one of Earth's simplest problems to solve, yet there is still trash and other debris tainting the ecosystems of the Florida Keys. If everyone took the extra step to relocate their trash to a designated trash can instead of leaving litter lying around, not only would the islands look better but hundreds of animals would be saved.

There are more and more calls from people concerned about wild animals caught in fishing line or different types of trash. It is imperative that people take some responsibility. If you are fishing and your line gets caught on something, don't just cut it and leave it. Days, weeks, even months or years later, that line can cause needless suffering to a wild animal. Not only is it dangerous for wildlife if fishing lines, lures, hooks, lead sinkers, etc. are left on and under bridges or in water around the mangroves, but there are also bylaws in place that restrict where and how people can fish.

The best way to help animals is to stop these problems from happening. If you like to fish, or have friends or family who do, please research and abide by the laws and bylaws pertaining to your favorite fishing bridges, boating and so on, and help prevent the unnecessary suffering of wild animals. A pelican unable to lift its head because of fishing line tangled around it, a heron starving to death because of a hook and fishing line caught in its throat, a starving loon unable to migrate due to a fishing line caught around its wings, an alligator dead because of a plastic toy in his stomach - these are just a few reallife examples of the ways paraphernalia left behind ghost netting and plastic tovs also can also harm animals. Seabirds mistake disposable lighters, plastic bottle cups and other bits and pieces of flotsam for food, or they ingest these items while gathering fish eggs and squid from the ocean, then regurgitate them to their young. The birds die of starvation while their stomachs are full of plastic. And cigarette butts littering the side of a road resemble the leaves and twigs that birds collect to make their nests; the filters may still contain toxins and other chemicals that the birds then lay their eggs on.

Key West High School girls and their leader Karen DeMaria join with Florida Keys Wildlife Rescue and its volunteers and staff to make a difference for the wild animals in our community and for people concerned about wildlife. Katie Armiger is 17 and a lot of her songs are not romantic. "It's a weird age for dating," she said.

he was 16 when she made her first album, called "Katie Armiger." She won critical acclaim with her second album, "Believe," released last summer. Still only 17, the rising country singersongwriter now has a hit on iTunes with "I Guess That's Love."

Katie is coming to Key West for the Songwriters' Festival. She plays at the Southernmost Beach Café on Thursday, April 30.

On June 23 she'll be 18, making her a Cancerian. "Crabby, emotional, moody," she confessed in a phone interview with Soundings. Does her music tend the same way? "Not crabby," she said.

Born in Sugarland, Texas, she has an apartment in Nashville these days. Both her mom and her dad are country-music fans but only one among her six brothers and sisters is "reallv musical."

Katie says she "pretty much always knew" she'd be a singer. Even in preschool, when she was forever in trouble, "I'd sing and make up songs in time out."

Her debut single, "17 In Abilene," is the highest charting debut for a solo independent artist since 2003. Not all of her songs are romantic, she told us, since boys are not at the center of her universe right now. "Seventeen is such a weird age for dating," she said. "And I'm too busy."

She has already appeared in People Magazine, Cosmo Girl and Seventeen. com, but when we spoke she confessed to some sleepiness. She'd been up all night packing for a trip to California where she's booked for a number of shows, including at the Crystal Palace in Bakersfield, before heading to Key West.

So writes Jay Parini, professor of English at Middlebury College, whose historical novel about the final days of Leo Tolstov. "The Last Station," is now a Hollywood film. His subject is the Key West Literary Seminar and the story appears in the May issue of Atlantic.

Key West, writes Parini, is where "novelists, playwrights and poets continue to hide out from northern winters among the island's leafy palms and clapboard Conch houses, largely ignoring the bawdy revels that take place every night

Now in its third decade, the Seminar is where, in Ianuary this year, Parini joined Gore Vidal and others — the "heavy hitters in the world of historical fiction" — for "something like pre-spring training."

Regarding historical fiction, Parini points out that any writing transmogrified by memory becomes fiction (from the Latin fictio, meaning "shaping"). "I once asked Peter Ackroyd, the English novelist and biographer, what the difference was between his novels and his biographies. He said to me, in his deadpan way, 'In biographies you can make things up. In novels you are obliged to tell the truth."

Walking along Duval Street on the last day of the seminar, Parini concludes with this pair of paragraphs: write a book about it.

"I wondered about the potent, combustible mix of reality and imagination, something that confronts all writers. What is real? What is made-up?

In 1914, mine workers struck a coal field owned by the Colorado Coal and Iron Co. In a confrontation that reached a climactic blaze on April 20, 11 children. two women and five miners to be truly enjoyed, should perished.

Three years later the site was purchased by the United Mine Workers of America. The massacre sparked a new era of labor relations. At the time, John D. Rockefeller Jr. was the largest stockholder in the company and he responded to the tragedy by hiring Mackenzie King to draw up an employee representation plan that gave workers a voice in the management of the mines. After purchasing the massacre site, the mine workers union erected a statue showing a miner, his wife and their infant child.

In 2003, someone cut off the heads of the man and woman as well as her arm. The statuary was made whole again in 2005 and rededicated in June that year.

Last week we asked readers if they believed the seasons are caused by the planet being closer to the sun in summer than in winter.

In fact the seasons are dictated by the earth's tilted axis. In July, which is summer in the northern hemisphere, the earth actually reaches its furthest distance from the sun — but the northen part of the planet is tilted towards the sun, giving longer days and more direct sunlight; in winter, it is tilted away. The seasons are reversed in the southern hemisphere, which is tilted towards the sun in January and away from it in July. If the distance from the sun dictated the seasons, it would be impossible for them to differ by region this

In the tropics, there is no substantial seasonal variation in sunlight.

Your Woman in Havana: Walking the Walk, Talking the Talk

By Stacy Rodriguez

am not sure, but I may be starting to walk like a Cuban woman. Either that or I just appear ridiculous.

Cultures, complete with body language and accents, seem to rub off on me.

I have trouble understanding why others can't do this — why they can't stop talking Spanish like an American, for example. Just say the words like they do!

And walk this way.

Here, tight clothing is the rule for women. Regardless of weight, the point seems to be to show every curve and ripple, a sentiment found in many parts of the world, including Duval Street and Kmart in Key West.

But here it's so prevalent that I find myself
wearing tops I wouldn't in Key
West — in Key
West, mind you.
I feel my hips
loosening up,

my shoulders back and chest out just as if I were — imagine — not ashamed of my body.

I'm in pretty good shape, mind you, but it has always been difficult for me to not sort of — hide. My WASPish upbringing certainly didn't include sensuality.

But in Havana, without thinking about it, I hold my upper body erect and my lower half becomes a sort of gyroscope. The Cuban women seem openly female. I'm not talking about sexism. They seem to be comfortable in their skin, their bodies simply are, and they are in them, are them.

They don't mind being part of the show. Walking around in Havana is a promenade for the young and beautiful as well as the older and attractive and even the not-so-attractive.

In walking my new Latin walk, I have slowed waaaaaaaayyyyyyy down.
When I first got here, I walked my Key West pace.
That's much too fast for this island nation.

And forget about the Manhattan crowd — the city people would just be streaks of light here. I loved the electric ballet of walking alone in New York. But I'm enjoying my Havana saunter, too.

I have nowhere to go, no one to meet, and even if I did, it wouldn't matter if I were late.

It's OK to run late here
— later than in Key West, even.

Other parts of my body are changing, too. My hands and arms are speaking their own language, conversing with their Cuban counterparts.

I have always absorbed the mannerisms and behaviors of those around me.

When I hung with a military crowd in Louisiana, strangers would figure me for a soldier. When I was tight with cops, I was asked at a grocery store if I was an off-duty officer. I was really uncomfortable with my Zelig tendencies, though, when I ran with the hip black jazz scene in New Orleans. It didn't matter how many people around me called each other "cats," it just didn't suit me. I picked up a Brooklyn accent, too, but I swear to God I never said "youse guys," not even once.

The English accents, the Southern drawls, the Boston clippers, the smokers, the drinkers — you name it, I have semimorphed into it. An old man last night selling mani (peanuts) on the streets seriously did not believe I was American.

Imagine!

He kept saying, in Spanish, "But were you born there?"

This is, for me, a compliment.

I read once that intelligence can be defined as quickly adapting to various circumstances.

Am I not a hot Latin cool cat or what?

tracking ship, the Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, arrived here for its sinking.

Smith Maritime and the crew of the tug Elsbeth III performed the perfect docking. The Vandenberg looked more ghastly even than Dick Cheney, just as alone and just as sinkable. It is a ship that spent the 1960s eavesdropping on Russian missile launches and when it was retired in 1983, a crew of six technicians came aboard every six months just to power up its electronics. The monster tub was finally struck from the naval register in 1993 and its last public exposure, until now, was as a Russian ship alongside Jamie Lee Curtis and Donald Sutherland in a movie called "Virus" (hence the Cyrillic letters on its rusting hulk that so baffled us onshore).

The Vandenberg has ioined the Western Union and the Mohawk to provide, for a while, a sort of navy at the waterfront. Former newspaper publisher Bill Barry pointed out that the Western Union, currently keelhauled at the dock, and the Vandenberg are both vastly different vessels that happen to have been involved in communications, the Western Union with cable and the Vandenberg with the space program. "Different legacies," said Barry, "but both ships are a benefit to us now. And one will float."

The scuttling takes place toward the end of the May. Six miles south of Key West, in 140 feet of water, the Vandenberg will become the second largest artificial reef in the world.

Commissioner Bill Verge, number-one civic official behind the project, seemed both exhausted and exhilarated. He did appreciate the "oxymoron," as he called it, of spending a million dollars to keep a boat afloat simply to sink it.

We asked Bill if he'd given any thought to what some fishermen have told us, that they were never consulted about the site of the sinking. They say that the muddy bottom where the ly topside up — remember the Spiegel Grove!) is a productive fishing area that lob- county's detention center sters ritually move through in droves. Fishermen employ trawls there and lines of traps a quarter-mile long, with 10 pounds of lobster caught in each trap. All of it will be disturbed by dive-boat traffic. Might this be a "taking" without the legal wrangling?

"I'm so sorry the Vandenberg is going to take 520 feet of the Atlantic Ocean," responded Verge. "Studies have shown that fishing increases around wrecks and oil rigs. There are now 198 species of fish at the Spiegel Grove."

One type of fishing will not be allowed at the wreck reef, however, and that's spear fishing. "We don't want someone mistaking a diver," said Verge, "for a grouper."

The letter on our front page this week from Major Tommy Taylor, chief at the Detention Center ("County Did Not Receive $1 Million Grant") provides an opportunity both to straighten out last week's story on keeping drug addicts and the mentally ill out of iail and to revisit the Vandenberg will lie (hopeful-critical state of the problem.

Twenty to 30 percent of those detained in the on Stock Island today are mentally ill or otherwise sick. The center has recently identified 44 individuals that are repeat offenders of small-time transgressions who alone have cost the county $327,000 to date.

"The resources on our side are limited," Taylor told us earlier in the month. The Guidance Clinic, for example, has cut back on its number of detox beds. "We see programs go away while the problem increases," he said. "To get a hold of a problem, you don't get rid of programs, you have to increase them."

County Sheriff Bob Peryam agrees. He called us to correct our confusion of pre-trial funding with intervention funding from the Reinvestment Act, which has not been forthcoming.

"The bottom line," said Peryam, "is that there are people in jail who shouldn't be there." No further funding for intervention "is really a shame," he said. "It's sad talking to folks at the state level, I just don't get it that they don't get it." To do the right thing, "We need to bring all the players to the table," said the sheriff, "The people in mental health, in substance abuse, the Key West Police Department, the public defender's office. The county is doing as well as anywhere because we all know each other here. But we're nowhere near where we're meant to be. Instead of preventing recidivism we have a huge cost to the taxpayer. There is a better way of doing business."

Pervam corrected our assertion that crime in the county has increased since Hurricane Wilma. Last year in Monroe County, the criminal head count dropped by 1,000 from the year before.

T n our issue of April 12, ■ we showed an aerial representation supposedly of the site of the proposed assisted and independent living facility at Truman Waterfront. In fact the picture showed the site of the proposed city marina at the waterfront. We regret the here are many fine civil rights memoirs out there — by politicians, preachers, activists and ordinary foot soldiers, white and black. Notably absent, however, are books by those who were simply caught up in the turmoil and attempted to do the right thing.

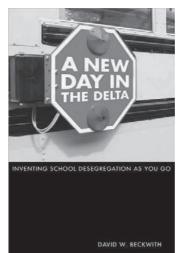

Of such is "A New Day in the Delta: Inventing School Desegregation As You Go" by David W. Beckwith, a gripping account of one man's struggles as a callow white teacher who, to his own considerable astonishment, found himself on the cutting edge of a seismic social transformation.

Today Beckwith lives on Little Torch Key and in Vero Beach, where he works in the financial sector. But 40 years ago he was a newly minted college graduate in need of a job and anxious to avoid the draft. When he was hired to teach in an all-black high school, he suppressed his nervousness and went in with an open

Nothing about Beckwith's upbringing had prepared him for what he was about to experience. He was the well-educated product of a loving and secure middle-class household who'd had little meaningful contact with poor people of any race. When he assumed his duties as a history teacher at Abraham Lincoln Attendance Center in Leland, Miss., he entered a world where two-parent families were the exception and years of vicious discrimination had blighted the students.

During his first weeks, Beckwith found it nearly impossible to maintain even a modicum of control as restive and resentful students tested his willpower and patience. "Most of my days seemed to start badly," a series of skirmishes that more often than not escalated into battles, which then, if not checked, became mini-wars." To manage even half an hour of academic instruction in such an environment became a Herculean endeavor that physically and mentally exhausted him.

When Beckwith finally got his students to do some work, the results were heartbreaking. Most lacked even basic literary skills. When asked to describe how the ancient Greeks lived, a pupil wrote: "The Athenian house was brikage. It was mak out of brikage and the he recalls. "Each began with house cause 1800 dollars as they was chief but they are a pretty buckat there was round about 21 rooms and the people was go out in the street and do number 1 and number 2 in road."

To his credit, Beckwith did not quit but rather believed in the kids and persevered. But any hopes of a smooth future were disrupted when federal court orders inexorably forced the mixing of the black and white school populations. Months of near chaos resulted — senseless fights. angry confrontations with hate-filled parents, and when Beckwith was relaxing at home one Saturday came a surprise visit from Byron de la Beckwith (infamous for his murder of Medgar Evers) claiming kinship.

Beckwith's memoir positively crackles with the tension and aggravation of those years, helped in large measure by his obvious sense of history at the time. He kept a careful diary and saved the various ephemera that came his way: staff memoranda that reveal the quotidian mechanics of desegregation; an obscene picture drawn by one of his students; and a lurid newsletter by the National States' Rights Party.

Though there are villains aplenty, "A New Day in the Delta" also has its heroes. none more impressive than the school's assistant principal, Caldwell M. Bibbs, "respected by both races and all ages." Bibbs was an administrator of the old school, seemingly equal to any challenge. "Light complexioned, mostly bald, physically strong and outwardly unemotional, he led by sending an unspoken message that he cared but that he would not put up with any misbehavior." When sterner measures were required, Bibbs resorted to a cotton-gin strap he referred to as "black power."

This is an important book that will resurrect many uncomfortable memories for those who actually experienced the first shocks of school desegregation. Though ultimately positive, the book pulls no punches in its portrait of a world turned upside down.

John Sledge is the book reviewer for the Mobile Press Register. "A New Day in the Delta" is available at Voltaire Books.

Haiku and the Battle to Free the Animals From Their Jails

n unusual coupling occurred this year at the normally rather restrained Robert Frost Poetry Festival.

Now in its 15th year at the Heritage House, the festival awards prizes to poems submitted by middle-school, high school and adult poets. There is also an open category for haiku poems, the Japaneseoriginated verse form that's more or less limited to 17 syllables in three lines.

When the five judges were done, the top prize in the adult division went to a haiku — or rather a series of haiku - that was essentially an "anti-haiku," doing battle against haiku on behalf of the animals and making for strange company with the three winners of the haiku division itself.

Winner of the adult division is Marsh Muirhead of Bemidji, which is in northern Minnesota. His poem, "Releasing the Animals," is about liberating the animals (and our instincts) from the traps of haiku.

Here are the three winning haiku, followed by the Muirhead poem. By means of metaphor and simile, yet with all the clarity and acuity of haiku itself, "Releasing the Animals" sets the beasts free to be whatever they

Symphony Show a Departure in Genre But Not In Quality

By Harry Schroeder

₹ he headlines had announced a "Spectacular New Direction For the Key West Symphony" and it was all of for the spare and effective that — from the expected evening of music by full symphonic orchestra to the concert version of a musical revue with four singers and a five-man backup band.

But if there were concertgoers disappointed at the substitution. I was not among them.

The show was Jason Robert Brown's "Songs For A New World." It consisted of nearly 20 songs, grouped very loosely around a common theme, varieties of American experience from the beginning to the present, mostly concerning love for example, the one in "A or money. The band was essentially a rhythm section, piano, keyboard, bass, drums and percussion. It was fine, although on a few of the rock numbers the drummer, succumbing to the nearly irresistible temptation of rock drummers to play loudly, hit the bass drum a little too hard, obscuring parts of the lyrics. David Troy Frances was both the piano accompanist and the director, responsible, along with choreographer Penny Leto,

The music, taken by itself, was not terrific. Much of the melodic writing was fairly routine. That would have been hard for the composer to avoid since the songs were long recitatives, sometimes running several minutes, rather than standard 32-bar tunes where good melodies are fairly easy to construct. And the show had only the loosest kind of structural unity. It was a series of autobiographical musical sketches without a real frame, like, power last weekend from the cumulative effect of its consecutive superb performances.

Davron Monroe offered an intense presence, especially in numbers expressing the frustration and sadness of being a black man in a less than hospitable new world. He has mastered at least two vocal Chorus Line." It achieved its styles along with his normal voice, a traditional blues style and a soft sweet black falsetto. This variety enables him to express a wide range of emotional states.

> Amy Farmer sang two moving pieces, one about a woman who chose money over everything else that men offered her and now regrets it, the other as the anxious mother of a soldier in the Revolution, home sewing a flag. She also did two comic turns as frustrated wives, one on the verge of suicide, the other (oddly a little out of character with the rest of the show) as the wife of Santa Claus, stuck once again with spending Christmas alone and hating it.

Kevin Odekirk had the most complex pieces to deal with dramatically, one having to do with the impact on a young man of a father's business failure, the other a relationship with a hopelessly manipulative lover.

He expressed the entire range of each situation.

The outstanding performer of the evening — by a small margin, given the excellence of the others — was L'Tarsha Long. In "Christmas Lullaby" she gave a powerful statement of faith; when she sang "I'm Not Afraid of Anything," she made you believe it. I fail entirely to understand why she isn't famous already. I've mentioned my admiration for her work in the past, citing her fine musicianship, her easy but compelling stage presence and her clear, intense emotional honesty. All that was there in this concert and in addition there were always surprises, nuances of vocal production adding that little bit of extra intensity that insists on and drives home the emotion. And in a duet as half of a reunited couple with Odekirk, he had the opening passage while she stood there silently, her feelings clear in her face and body, a strong presence but not at all obtrusive, not in any sense upstaging him. It was the perfect way for her to be where she was.

For the past 11 years the Key West Symphony has set a welcome high standard here for orchestral music. This show was a departure in terms of genre but not at all in terms of quality.

"The Soloist" Plays a Song of Friendship

by Shirrel Rhoades

hen I worked in New York City, I came to know every street person between Grand Central Station and my office at 2 Park Ave., a 10-block walk. There was the bag lady who chased commuting executives away from "her" trashcans. The demented woman who scribbled gibberish in a notebook while squatting in a doorway at the Phillip Morris building. The guy who slept on top of subway grates, wrapping himself in dry cleaning bags for warmth. The panhandler who told me that he always went to Florida for the win-

I often wondered what their stories were. No point in asking them, for they were damaged goods, not sure what had brought them to this meager existence.

Nathaniel Anthony Ayers is a real-life person, a virtuoso musician who suffered a mental breakdown during his second year at Juilliard. The doctors diagnosed it as schizophrenia. After years with his mother, he moved to Los Angeles when she died, searching for his father. Not surprisingly, he wound up living on the streets, playing a broken-down cello for spare Helfgott also suffered from change.

A Los Angeles Times reporter wrote a series of columns about this street-corner soloist, even befriended him. This story became a book and now a movie.

ner Jamie Foxx ("Ray") ventures into the blurry personality of Ayers. And Robert Downey Jr. ("Iron Man") steps up to the mark as newspaperman Steve Lopez.

Schizophrenia is a mental disorder that results in misperceptions of reality. It can manifest itself as auditory hallucinations, paranoia, disorganized thinking and social dysfunction. It affects about one-half percent of the population. Genetics and neurobiology seem to be at the root of the own TV sitcom, he broke psychosis.

This is a meaty role for Foxx, reminiscent of Geoffrey Rush's turn as pianist David Helfgott in "Shine." Like Nathaniel Avers, Australian prodigy a schizoaffective disorder.

British director Joe Wright is best known for his takes on "Pride and Prejudice" and "Atonement." Here he captures an incisive snapshot of the American scene, replete with disposable street people and empathetic newspaper reporters. Perhaps being a Brit, he sees it from a more objective and observational viewpoint.

Story aside, you will focus on the two lead actors.

Born as Eric Marlon Bishop, Jamie Foxx is considered a triple threat: an actor, stand-up comedian and musician. His stage name is a tribute to the late comedian Redd Foxx. Jamie started performing in comedy clubs on a dare from a girlfriend, then won a regular slot on TV's "In Living Color." After a run on his into movies in 1997 with the somewhat forgettable "Booty Call." Eventually drawing on his musical talent, he snagged an Oscar for his role as blind singer Ray Charles in "Ray" (2004). He was also nominated for "Collateral" that same year.

Foxx is spot-on in his woozy schizoid interpretation of Nathaniel Ayers. But the anchor of "The Soloist" is Robert Downey Jr.'s character — for we see Ayers through the eyes of newspaperman Steve Lopez.

Downey is an actor equal to the task. Despite earlier battles with drug abuse, he has rebounded with "Iron Man" and "Tropic Thunder," popular fare balancing out such dramatic milestones as "Chaplin," "Less Than Zero," "The Gingerbread Man" and "Good Night, and Good Luck."

So in truth, "The Soloist" is an acting duet. And it's not really a biopic about a schizophrenic musician so much as it's an examination of the true meaning of friendship.

"Examined Life" Is Philosophy 101

Recently the Tropic Cinema showed "The Perverts' Guide to Cinema," an egghead's look at the meanings behind movies as told by a Slovenian movie buff named Slavoj Zizek. Known for his showy personality, Zizek is also a respected philosopher and psychoanalyst.

In fact, a young Canadian-American filmmaker named Astra Taylor did a documentary about him that was immodestly titled "Zizek!" — exclamation point included.

Now Taylor comes back for another roll of the philosopher's stone, delivering a second documentary that again features Zizek — along with seven other contemporary philosophers. "Examined Life" is currently playing at the Tropic Cinema.

The film's title comes from Plato, who observed in line 38A of his "Apology" that "the unexamined life is not worth living."

Yet, this documentary offers an approach to philosophy that's more in keeping with Aristotle, a philosopher who liked to walk around while lectur-

With the tagline "Philosophy is in the streets," Taylor and her camera crew follow their subjects along city streets, through parks, and into the gleaming interior of an international airport. They often break the fourth wall, interacting with their subject, shown packing their cameras and sound equipment like a modern-day archaeological expedition.

This documentary is much like taking a stroll with your favorite professor, listening to his or her monologue, enjoying a classroom lecture outside the classroom. Peter Singer walks down Fifth Avenue, admiring expensive shoes in the window of Bergdorf Goodman while discussing the ethics of consumerism. Judith Butler explores a San Francisco second-hand clothing store with a wheelchair-bound friend, talking about accessibility and gender issues.

Unfortunately, these eight philosophers — Cornel West, Avital Ronell, Peter Singer, Kwame Anthony Appiah, Martha Nussbaum, Michael Hardt, Judith Butler and Slavoj Zizek — don't explore much new territory, seemingly content at "summarizing some of their main ideas or repeating riffs they've done before," says one critic.

It would've seemed best to evaluate "Examined Life" as a whole, but these diverse philosophical soliloquies don't lend themselves to a thematic interpretation. The film is more like a Whitman's Sampler of current philosophical thinking.

Thus we're left to pick at individual personalities, noting Avital Ronell's narcissistic arrogance, Cornell West's "dazzling high culture jive talk," or Zizek's fidgety pronouncements that are obviously designed to provoke.

As Avital Ronell says early in the film, "We don't know where this film is going to land, whom it's going to shake up, wake up, or freak out, or bore..."

"Examined Life" doesn't really examine life as much as it examines philosophy.

film or its director Steve McOueen. He's not the famed star of "Bullitt" and "Papillon." Nor is this the 1983 vampire flick starring David Bowie, Susan Sarandon and Catherine Deneuve.

Rather, this meticulous tale of slow starvation for a cause stars Michael Fassbender ("Band of Brothers," "300") as the fatalistic young IRA protes-

Robert Gerard Sands ioined the IRA during the Troubles of 1972. His political commitment put a strain on his marriage and his wife eventually left him.

After several bouts in prison for his support of the Republican cause, he was again convicted of gun possession in 1977 and sentenced to 14 years.

A forceful personality, he was chosen as commanding officer of the IRA prisoners at Long Kesh (as Maze Prison was called) and later elected a member of the United Kingdom Parliament during his hunger strike.

The prisoners' rights strike centered around Five Demands:

recruitment into the Irish Republican Army hit an alltime high.

This film by noted visual artist Steve McQueen focuses on the last six weeks of Bobby Sands' life and the physical and mental impact of slow starvation on him. Don't be confused by this It's a grim tale, replete with all the details: bleeding sores, kidney failure, stomach ulcers and the inability to stand.

> McQueen's art films are typically projected onto walls of an art gallery rather than theater screens. Usually shot in black and white, Andy Warhol has been cited as the influence of these minimalist films.

> "Hunger" is a more traditional Technicolor telling. McQueen won the prestigious Caméra d'Or award for first-time filmmakers at 2008 Cannes Film Festival.

The raw brutality of prison life is shown with unblinking starkness. In this era of Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo Bay, you'll watch this movie about the treatment of political prisoners in a new light.

"Up in Smoke" Lights Up at Art Bar

 $B^{\text{ill Clinton did it but}}_{\text{didn't inhale. Barack}}$ Obama inhaled but only did it as a youth. Jack Nicholson admits he's done it from time to time. Politically incorrect Bill Maher does it all the time. And Richard "Cheech" Marin and Tommy Chong have been doing it since the

> You might say the same Chong's Up in Smoke" — the granddaddy of all Stoner Movies. This 1978 cult comedy is the upcoming Thursday Thrillz selection at the Art Bar on Caroline Street. Just the thing to take the edge off a hard week.

This doobie-do movie by Cheech and Chong started it all. There would have been no "Pineapple Express," "Half Baked," "How High," "Fridays," et al. without "Up in Smoke."

The two hippie comics retooled their standup routines for this first of a halfdozen films together. After smoking a few joints, they came up with a rambling (but funny) plot about two dopers who try to smuggle a van constructed of sprayon marijuana from Tijuana to Los Angeles.

The cast includes Stacy Keach as an obsessive narc cop and Tom Skerritt as a weed-loving Vietnam vet. Strother Martin and Edie Adams play Tommy Chong's wacky parents. Ellen Barkin does an uncredited walk-on. And Harry Dean Stanton had a minor role as a dope-dealing prison guard, but the scene was left on the cutting room floor. The rest of this ragtag cast is comprised of relatives, friends, acquaintances and aspiring unknowns.

Is the film funny? Jack Nicholson was the test. At the time he'd been banged up in a car accident and it hurt him to laugh. So director Lou Adler screened it privately for his pal and judged its humor by the number of painful groans from Nicholson.

By the way, the car Cheech and Chong are driving at the beginning of the movie actually belonged to Jack Nicholson.

"Up in Smoke" was banned in South Africa for fear it would encourage drug use. It does, to be truthful. But in a playful counterculture way. If you lived through the '70s, assuming no memory loss from your stoner habits. this will evoke "a simpler time when the clouds had cannabis linings."

Fortunately for all you pothead moviegoers (you know who you are), the Art Bar will be showing the film on its open-air back porch, now named the Secret Spot.

If you've ever smoked a joint, I promise you'll laugh. And it won't even be due to a contact high.

Susan Bailey and Richard Buckheim: Objects and Abstractions

'New Territory' by Richard Buckheim

ucky Street Gallery presents the viewer with an interesting and unusual experience this month: A joint exhibit with Susan Bailey and Richard Buckheim, two married artists whose works, quite different in media and method, are complementary in that both reveal seasoned artistic experience and considerable technical accomplishment.

Bailey creates assemblages and constructions from a variety of disparate objects. When I first saw her work several years ago, she was using discarded books as objects to turn into art. In the current exhibit, she turns her various materials into three-dimensional collages that focus on time and movement.

Over the years, Bailey has collected several wooden shoe fasts, forms that are used to shape leather into women's shoes. Other objects are skates, antique spurs and modern casters.

On a low platform, "A Tribute to Fred Astaire" combines the shoe fast, three casters and two metal flying wires that end in hard plastic floating tails. The shoe fasts and the flying wires suggest both motion and grace. The whimsical juxtaposition of various materials and shapes accounts a small bundle at its end. for much of the charm of the piece. And note the shadows.

"Life History" appears to be two ends of the clock pendulum. A real clock spring hangs to the abstract expressionfrom the bottom of the piece. The joining of the mechanical and the personal (the shoe trees) justifies the title. "Process" is a fairly complicated piece that has an imposing wooden base. A shoe fast forms the basis of the piece. From that projects a metal knob that has a zigzag metal piece coming out of it, which resembles comic book notations of fast motion or the winged shoes of Mercury. From the edge of the shoe form is a metal spring with Whatever the "Process" is, it is amusing and visually exciting.

Richard Buckheim is an a wall clock, with shoe trees as abstract painter, who notes ism of his youth. He usually paints on large canvases with "focus on paint and composition, spontaneity and color compatibility." Recently he has also begun making monotypes, smaller prints that allow canvas covered with loosely relatively quick involvement with paint and then a pressing of the single reverse image.

Like most of these images, "Monotype #14" has a top of a few shades of black. In the lower half, Buckheim concocts his own color, in this case an interesting orange. Using a small roller as well as a brush, the painter has most of his action occurring in the lower half of the print. although there is a white spiral that his recent work is a return line coming down out of the black, probably cut through the black with an edge of card-but its feeling of openness board.

In "New Territory."

Buckheim consciously imitated Helen Frankenthaler in having large sections of the applied paint. The resulting abstraction is a combination of somewhat runny colors — grays, yellows, black and red. But the edges of his canvas are well defined. Here, a black horizontal crosses the bottom of the painting, and the edges have characteristic tooth-like marks (made from a stencil), an enclosing device that visually focuses the central abstractions.

Buckheim's latest series has ists.

by Maine, not its topography and freedom. The final piece. "Maine Monument," is a stately painting, made up primarily of a very wide vertical block, which itself is like a stage curtain with two side panels and a central section, where most of the painterly action occurs. And that action involves variations on shades of rusty reds. The backdrop to the central panels is black, topped with a rusty orange. There is a regal, ceremonial feel to the piece — a further demonstration of Buckheim virtuosity.

Old McDonald Had a Farm — And So Did We

By Chris Belland

In case you haven't noticed it's getting a little warmer around here, which signals the end of the winter growing season. I thought I'd take the opportunity to report back on the results of our "farm."

I had always been pretty much discouraged by people about growing vegetables in Key West. Everyone said that either the soil was bad or it was too hot. On the other hand I have some friends who have been pretty successful growing stuff, so we thought we'd give it a whirl.

A friend of ours has a swimming pool that was filled in about six inches from the top and gave us permission to use it for a garden. It measured 15 by 25 feet. After the hurricane, we had a load of seaweed delivered and scattered about three inches thick over the top, to which we added a three-inch layer of what I call "vaca caca" (cow manure) and finally about two or three inches of top soil. We rented a rotary tiller and mixed the whole concoction just like they used to do with a mule and a plough ... well, not really. We then covered it over with a plastic tarp and let it "cook" for 30 days. This cooking process was basically to kill any unwanted pests (nematodes) in the dirt. It worked fine.

Then came the fun part. We hoed everything into rows and planted. Mind you, this is the first time we've ever done it so it was all experimental. We used the plants and seeds generally available at the hardware store and Home Depot. We used a sprinkler on a timer that watered the garden for about 30 minutes every morning at 5:30. I was told by my assistant, Nancy (an English lass with a very green thumb), this was the best time to water so the garden would have the entire day to dry out on top, thus precluding the possibility of fungus on the leaves.

The other parasites we were worried about were white flies and mealy bugs. I read somewhere that they are attracted to yellow and I tried out an experiment. I tied yellow plastic ribbon to the fence (for growing pole beans) and soaked them with olive oil. To my surprise, it worked! The white flies and mealy bugs were, indeed, attracted to the yellow and stuck to the olive oil and we never had a problem the entire time our garden grew. We also wanted this to be an organic garden so we never used any chemical pesticides. Rather, we sprayed with a concoction of concentrated liquid garlic (available at pet stores) and pepper. This, too, worked on everything except the big, fat, green horned worms that went after the tomatoes like an Italian chef. There was some solace and revenge in squishing them.

The results? Fantastic! Since November, we have enjoyed bumper crops of collard greens, arugula, romaine lettuce, brown lettuce, eggplant, broccoli, cucumbers, cauliflower, pole beans, bush beans and we even got some tomatoes, despite the large worms we didn't notice until it was too late. Really rewarding was the vast amount of herbs we were able to grow and that did awesomely well. We had flat parsley, oregano, curly parsley, sage, rosemary and thyme (hmmm, I feel the title of a song coming on). Oh, we also had mint, which if you're not careful will take over your entire garden. I kept it at bay with mint juleps.

I am pleased to report to anybody who thinks they want fresh organic food in the Florida Keys, all you have to do is be prepared to work a little for it. On the other hand, I can tell you the reward of seeing your plants grow is a wonderful feeling of accomplishment. The knowledge that what you're eating is also healthy is the cherry on top. I won't say it's free because we did invest money into it, not to mention the time, but it was worth it. Don't have a large area? Don't let that stop you. I have had equally good results with growing in pots on my condo porch.

A Side Benefit

What now? It's getting very hot and we were thinking of growing peanuts and maybe melons. Peanuts, of course, would put nitrogen back in the soil. We'll see. One other thing I will mention to you is that a great lesson learned from all of this is that growing your own food also has a lot to do with good environmental practices from the standpoint of your household waste. We started recycling at home quite some time ago and then, with the garden, started composting — essentially burying it raw directly in the garden — everything from the dinner table except for meats and dairy products. What was interesting is that we went from throwing away one plastic bag of garbage every other day to less than two per week. It's amazing how little we really need to throw away. So, if you're planning on a garden in the fall, there is no time like the present to start composting. By the coming fall, you'll not only have thrown less garbage away, but you'll have a great start on your good growing soil.

The Miracle of Worms

When I was a boy, my father had a large washtub out by our garden into which we put our raw garbage and started a little worm farm. You can't imagine how fast these little suckers grow. Within several months, the washtub was hardly large enough to contain the vast number of worms that were periodically transplanted to our garden. On the county extension Web site, Kim Gabel can tell you how, where and when you can grow your very own herd of worms. Herd is probably not the right word but it just sounds right. Head 'em out, move 'em out and worms will dig through your garden 24/7, aerating the soil and providing you with worm poop to help your garden grow.

Happy gardening. If anyone has any interesting experiments that you have tried and that worked, please let me know so I can pass them on.

Sincerely,

Mr. & Mrs. McDonald

Puerto Rican Cooking Is Tasty and Diverse

By Joanna Brady Schmida

T t's easy to lump the cuisines of the Caribbean into one. With similar climates, it's reasonable to assume they all have access to much the same ingredients and spices. Their common produce and many similar recipes unite a number of the islands in the kitchen and at the dinner table. If you add the Latino culinary contributions of South Florida to the mix, you have a very interesting fusion of cuisines.

Yet, as anyone who has spent even a short time in the Caribbean islands will tell you, there are a number of differences in the way each culture prepares its food. The Caribbean includes islands and countries as diverse as Cuba, Curação, Dominica, Dominican Republic, the French Antilles (including Guadeloupe and Martinique), Haiti, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, and the Virgin Islands, both British and American. Settlers of each of these countries and the people who came after have all left their culinary stamp on the indigenous cooking that was already in place.

Puerto Rican food, along with Cuban cooking, probably has the most Spanish influence and is among the most flavorful of the islands. Surprisingly, there are only a couple of dozen Puerto Rican restaurants throughout Florida, with just three of them in Miami.

It's only natural that when we think of food with a Latin twist in Key West and Miami, we're far more apt to order Cuban, even when food from other countries is available. But in other cities, notably New York City – where, in the 20th century, the great depression, World War II and the advent of air travel created a huge diaspora of Puerto Ricans moving to the U.S. — there are some great restaurants serving excellent Puerto Rican dishes suited to every budget.

The cooking of Puerto Rico has its roots in Spanish, African and Taino indigenous cooking. The base of many dishes is "sofrito," which is used to make soup dishes and create meals based on rice. I always whip up a batch when I make paella. Sofrito (which means "lightly fried") adds so much to Creole and Caribbean foods, it's a good idea to make it in a large quantity and store it in the refrigerator, where it will keep for several days; or freeze it in ice trays to add pizzazz to your Latino and Creole dishes.

While there are many different versions of sofrito, the basics are green and red peppers, onions, garlic, cilantro and olive (or achiote) oil.

Although it is, by definition a cooked sauce, uncooked it can make a good salsa for cooked fish or meat and an excellent addition to cold soups like gazpacho.

Borikén was the Amerindian name for Puerto Rico. When Columbus discovered America, there were two native tribes occupying many of the Caribbean islands: The Caribs and the Arawaks. The Caribs are said to have been cannibals but the Arawaks (or Tainos) were not, and it was from them that the European settlers to Puerto Rico learned about foods like yucca, peppers and corn. The Tainos also invented the barbecue, using bamboo sticks to fashion "barbacoa," the crude grilles they used to dry and cook meat.

The Taíno/Arawak people ate many tropical roots and tubers like taro and yucca. They also loved peppers: cachucha pepper, which is a slightly hot habanero pepper; achiote; and a very hot pepper called ají caballero. They introduced the Europeans to peanuts, guavas, pineapples, cocoplum, Guinea arrowroot, calabazas and soursops. The Tainos also grew varieties of beans and corn, guavas and pineapples.

In exchange, the Spanish brought wheat, garbanzos, garlic, salt cod, olives, olive oil, black pepper, onions, garlic, cilantro, oregano, basil, orange, grapefruit, eggplant, ham, lard, chicken, beef, pork and cheese from their own country. Via Africa, they introduced the natives to sugarcane, coffee, okra, yams, sesame seeds, sweet bananas and plaintains; via Mexico, they brought in cocoa and other foods that grew there.

Just as they did in the southern United States, African slaves influenced the Puerto Rican kitchen considerably, introducing the use of plantains and coconuts, and the concept of frying food. Add the influence of early Dutch, French and Italian immigrants and you had the basis for Puerto Rico's creole cooking. Later on, laborers from China and India brought their culinary influence to the island. Puerto Rico was ceded to the U.S. by the Treaty of Paris in 1898, after the Spanish American War. As of 1917, its citizens are considered American, although they cannot vote here. As you might expect, today the Puerto Rican kitchen has been influenced by American foods — for better or for worse. There are McDonald's everywhere on the island, along with other fast food shops and chain restaurants. Working women take advantage of the many prepared foods now available, as well as packaged and convenience foods.

I recently received a copy of "Puerto Rican Cookery by Carmen Aboy Valldejuli (published by Pelican), which has to be the definitive book on the subject. The late author, who was born into the island's gentry in 1912 and died in 2005, grew up in Puerto Rico and later moved to the U.S. She first wrote the book in 1975; it is in its 34th printing this vear, a remarkable shelf life for any book, let alone a cookbook dedicated to a relatively small Caribbean nation. Illustrated with Taino Indian petroglyphs, Valldejuli's book takes the reader on an interesting culinary journey, introducing a great variety of recipes that she presents in a very clear way.

Here are a few Puerto Rican dishes you might enjoy trying:

The New Shape of Wine for the New Millennium

By Steve Calderwood

t the Taste of Key West on Monday I had three different people bring up the subject of box wines and, in fact, the evening before I had attended a going-away party is quite simple — value. If and brought two boxes of wine (I'm so avant garde!).

You could say that bag-inthe-box wines have gotten a pretty bad reputation. I've always touted them as the best three liters of wine that $5 can buy. But, believe it or not, things are changing.

Today, the rest of the world has been much faster to adopt box wines. In hardly efficient. Australia, more than 50 percent of all wine sales are in some form of box. European a pallet to ship your wine, consumers, too, have been much more open to accepting the cardboard creations.

So what happened? Do they know something we don't (once again)?

The answer is that while we were all running around with our blinders on and pooh-poohing the thought of wine in cardboard, some innovative wine makers were actually starting to put some decent juice into these cheap, efficient containers. As a result, box wine sales are now the fastestgrowing segment of the U.S. market.

Those of you who regularly read this column know I'm a fan of alternative closures. I've been touting screw caps for years and even those damn plastic corks are finally starting to get better. At the same time, Portugal has finally cleaned up its act (literally) and the level of tainted cork has gone down substantially.

Why even contemplate a cardboard Americans are still having a hard time accepting screw caps? The answer you're making a nice wine that you want to sell at a good price, the easiest way to bring down the cost is to get rid of the bottle.

Bottles are usually either 750 or 1.5 liters; any larger and they become unwieldy. They're expensive, heavy and oddly shaped, which makes transporting them

Just consider the fact that when you're filling up approximately 20 to 30 percent of that pallet will be air because of the sloping of the bottles' necks. Plus you have the added expense of the weight of the bottles and the cost of the cardboard separators that keep the bottles from hitting each other and breaking. On top of that, a bottle on average costs $1 by the time you fill it and stuff a cork in it. The box costs one tenth of that and you have three liters in it, the equivalent of four bottles. Now don't get me wrong, I'm not advocating doing away with bottles. I love them. But for a good everyday drinking wine, the box has some great advantages.

There are two types of boxes that are currently being used to package wine. The one we're most familiar with is the bag-ina-box type. This is the one that has a plastic bag with a pour spout on it that's sealed in a cardboard box.

The second is called a Terra box when we Pac and it looks like a juice box.

> For the bag-in-a-box style, other than the cost of packaging and transport the big benefit is that, because no air gets into the bag after it's opened, it will stay good for up to six weeks. You might have the equivalent of four bottles but there's no hurry to finish it off. Additionally, most three-liter boxes range from $14 to $25, which is the equivalent of spending $3.50 to $6 for a 750 ml bottle. At that price, you can't even get Carlo Rossi.

The Terra Pac, on the other hand, doesn't have the air-blocking advantage, it's just cheaper and is normally used for a higher quality of wine. However, they normally go for between $8 and $12 and that's usually for a 1 liter box, not a 750 ml bottle.

The one caveat about the bag-in-the-box types is that they are not hermetically sealed and as such, over time, air can get into the wine. Therefore most of these will have an expiration date on them. Check it! Especially if you're picking it up at a store that probably doesn't turn them over too quickly.

Finally, which ones should we try? First of all, stay away from Franzia and Almaden, they're still putting inferior wine in five-liter boxes.

Some that I've found quite drinkable include Black Box's merlot, Hardy's shiraz and the Banrock Station chardonnay. In this day and age when we're all looking for ways to stretch a dollar, these are great to have around for everyday consumption.

And if you do get a bad box wine, remember that you can always make Sangria.

On to our local wine

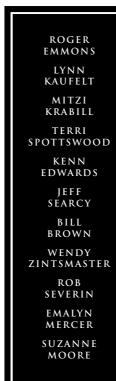

Tonight, April 26, from 4 to 6 p.m., Upstairs at Louie's is having a wine and chocolate pairing party. Various chocolate fondues will be available along with wines and liquors selected to complement them. The cost is $15; call 310-5880 for more info.

On Wednesday, April 29, from 6 to 8 p.m., the Dock Café's Wine by the Water bar is having a tasting of more than 40 rosés, plus pass-around hors d'oeuvres. The cost is $15 and seating is limited; call 731-3842 to book your spots now.

On Thursday, April 30, at 6:30 p.m. at the White Street Bistro, the Taster's Guild is having a tasting featuring 20 90-plus rated South American wines for less than $20. The cost is $25 and all the wines are available for purchase at 10 percent over cost. As usual, Jennifer will be putting out her incredible spread of apps to nosh on as well. Call 292-4004 for reservations.

That's it for this week.

What to Look for in a Professional Personal Trainer

By Daniel Reynen

heck it out. If you're thinking about working with a personal trainer, those may be the three most important words in your vocabulary. Before you start any program, you need to know some important information.

The first thing you should ask for is a current certificate from one of the national personal training certification companies. If your trainer hasn't taken the time to get certified, you need to ask yourself how they learned what they're trying to teach you. The last thing you want is somebody calling themselves a "personal trainer" to use you as their guinea pig while they throw together random workout routines or give you Association; National a program ripped out of a magazine. You're paying for them to be the expert and to design programs specific to your goals, not just show up to count reps and sets.

can confirm their license is current by making one phone call. If you don't know what companies are reputable.

here's a list of the top eleven in alphabetical order: Aerobic and Fitness Association of America; American College of Sports Medicine; American Council on Exercise; Cooper Institute: International Sports Sciences Association: National Academy of Sports Medicine; National Council on Strength and Fitness; National Endurance and Sports Trainers Association: National Exercise Trainers Federation of Professional Trainers; and the National Strength and Conditioning Association.

pulmonary resuscitation) certificate and a first-aid certificate. They're easy to get from local charities like the American Red Cross or the American Heart Association. Because working out is a strenuous activity, you want someone who's trained to help if an emergency happens.

Speaking of emergencies, ask your trainer for a copy of their liability insurance certificate and then call the company to verify they're covered. If they work as an employee, make sure the facility you're working out in covers them. In many cases trainers will work as independent contractors so they should carry their own insurance. A policy covering them for $500,000 is a reasonable minimum amount.

If your trainer doesn't have insurance and the facility they're working in won't cover them, run away as fast as you can. In order to get insurance, trainers must have current certificates and credentials. If they don't self and have your trainer carry any, that means they're scramble trying to figure out either not insurable because how they'll deal with it. of previous problems or they simply don't care enough to make sure you'll be protected. If an insurance company won't take the risk on them, vou shouldn't either.

Inspect the facility in which you'll be working out as closely as your trainer. Here are some basics to look for. If you're doing a lot of cardio, make sure the air is clean and free of mold. Look at the equipment and see that it's well maintained and that cables don't show signs of fraying or wear. Weights should be on racks, off the floor and there should be sweat towels for everyone.

Confirm that there's a first-aid kit nearby to handle minor cuts or bruises. One of the most important safety things you should look for is an AED (automatic external defibrillator) and ask if anyone is trained to use it. Each of those things may seem minor, but the last thing you want to do is hurt your-

Finally, protect your wallet. Because anyone can call themselves a personal trainer, you don't want to be scammed. It's easy for a "trainer" to take your money up front and then disappear without providing the service. You can protect yourself by paying with a credit card. Then, if you don't get the sessions or services you paid for, your credit card company will reimburse you for the balance.

Hiring a personal trainer is a big decision. You'll be working closely with whomever you choose, so take a few minutes to "check it out" and make your decision with all the facts.

Caution: Before beginning any diet or exercise program, check with your doctor or health care professional first. For a free consultation with a trainer, call us at 296-3434 or read all of our articles online at www. WeBeFit.com.

To Get Big Arms, First, Don't Overtrain Them

By Tony Wagner

Dear Mr. Fitness:

The letter you wrote about helping the guy out

My arms! I think they are too small. I know they are. My girlfriend doesn't think so since I've been working out. Everything else on me has gotten better except my arms. I try to hit them heavy every work out. Sometimes I add some extra barbell curls at the end of my other work outs. I do them three times a week except when I do the extra ones, but that's only once in a while. I'm 19 and have been working out for three years now. I saw you doing arms at your gym and had to write to you. Your arms were huge! I want arms like that. Please answer my letter.

Dear Micro:

Thank you for the compliment. Arms have always been a high priority for me since my bodybuilding contest career. I have, and still do, see guys with well developed physiques, but no arms. It throws a wrench in one's ability to be symmetrical. And symmetry is where it's at. I think that's the main reason I paid attention to arms.

It sounds like a classic case of overtraining your - Micro arms. You state you exercise them hard three times a week. Then, after all of that hammering, you add some extra curls in there too. Let's think about that for a moment. Remember. even the largest arms out there are still relatively small when compared to other body parts. Too, the arms are needed when exercising any other upper body part. Do your chest and you are training your triceps. Blast your back, you're smokin' your biceps. Crush the shoulders, you're

Nurses Are Building a Healthier America

By Randy Detrick

ursing can be defined as a profession focused on assisting individuals, families and communities in attaining, maintaining and recovering optimal health and functioning. Modern definitions of nursing define it as a science and an the vital roles nurses play art that focuses on promoting quality of life as defined by persons and families, throughout their life experiences from birth to care to the end of life.

The American Nurses Association defines nursing as the protection, promotion and optimization of health and abilities; prevention of illness and injury; alleviation of suffering through the diagnosis and treatment of human responses; and advocacy in health care for individuals, families, communities and populations.

On Tuesday, May 6, the American Nurses Association and Lower Keys Medical Center start celebrating National Nurses Week, which is held every year during May 6-12. The purpose of National Nurses Week is to raise public awareness of the importance of nursing and to help educate the public about in meeting the health care needs of the American people.

This annual recognition of nurses ends on the day of Florence Nightingale's birthday, the woman most responsible for and most remembered for being a pioneer of nursing and a reformer of hospital sanitation methods.

Lower Keys Medical Center pays tribute to our hospital nurses who provide highly skilled, safe and quality care in a variety of hospitals to visiting people in their homes and caring for them in schools, to research in pharmaceutical companies. Nurses work in occupational health settings (also called industrial health settings), free-standing clinics and physician offices, nurserun clinics, longterm care facilities and camps. Thev also work on cruise ships and in military service. Nurses act as ers and consultants to the health-care and insurance industries. Some are attorneys and others work with attorneys as legal nurse consultants, reviewing patient records to assure that adequate care was provided and testifying in court. Nurses can work on a temporary basis that involves doing shifts without a contact in a variety of settings, sometimes known as per diem nursing, agency nurses retiring or leaving nursing or travel nursing.

> According to projections released from the Bureau of Labor Statistics. RNs top the list of the 10 occupations with the largest projected job growth in the vears 2002-2012. Although RNs have listed among the top 10 growth occupations in the past, this is the first time in recent history that RNs have ranked first. They also report that more than 2.9 million RNs will be employed in the year 2012, up 623,000 from the nearly 2.3 million RNs employed in 2002.

However, the total job openings, which include both job growth and the net replacement of nurses, will be more than 1.1 million. This growth, coupled with current trends of the profession and fewer new nurses, could lead to a shortage of more than one million nurses by the end of this decade.

Lower Keys Medical Center is soliciting stories that will help pay tribute to our nurses. For example, an individual may want to thank the nurse who cared for him/her or his/her family member; or perhaps a nurse was involved in saving a particular individual's life and the individual would like to show his/her gratitude.

To help us recognize the hospital's nurses and give an individual the opportunity to share his/her story and pay tribute to a particular nurse or to all indispensable nurses on this special day and to send a thank you to a nurse, visit www.LKMC.com and simply click Contact Us.

working the triceps again. So you see, they get stimulated quite a bit when we exercise. It becomes comparatively easy to over train them. Then we become frustrated when we experience little in the way of results, and wham! we train them even more. The arms need proper time to fully recover from training them. Don't do more, in other words, do less. Seems contradictory, but it is true.

My first bit of advice to you is to take a week off from working out. That's right, a whole week. When you come back to train, train your arms only once per week. Do something like exercise your triceps with your shoulders and chest. This way you have fully warmed up your triceps by doing the chest and shoulders, and you won't overtrain them later in the week. You will be taking advantage of completely working your triceps all at one time, not coming back later in the week and hitting them again by doing other body parts. The same for your biceps. Train them when you do back. Doing back exercises first again will prep the biceps for work. Do not forget to train your forearms on this day. Forearms are an integral part of arm training. Hitting the arms hard once a week will provide them with all of the rest they require. You must remember that putting a quarter of an inch on your arms will be a big deal. It will happen, be patient and train them only once weekly. That's what I did and it worked. Keep it up and soon I'll be asking you how did you get such big arms?

Tvnes-Saunders

In recognition of Women's History Month, the American Society for Public Administrators has honored Phyllis Tynes-Saunders, a 25-year veteran of Miami-Dade County.

Tynes-Saunders is the daughter of Mildred Tynes of Key West and currently resides in Coral Gables with her husband Silas and children Lynsey, Silas III and Lilah. She completed her undergraduate degree in special education at Florida State University and has a master of science degree in public administration from Florida International University.

She was appointed director of the department of human services at Miami-Dade County in March 2007. Prior to that she served as deputy director for a year. Within her first year as department director, Tynes-Saunders successfully implemented new programmatic and administrative controls.

She oversees a staff of 700 and is responsible for managing and operating a $255-million budget. The department serves more than 250,000 clients annually, through various social services including substance abuse treatment, elderly care, child care, refugee and migrant services and assistance to victims of domestic violence. Under her leadership the department received recognition from the Council of Accreditation for best practices in human service delivery.

That E-collar Is On Your Pet For a Good Reason

By Dr. Doug Mader

O. Dear Dr. Doug — I have a question for you. I don't understand why, when people spend thousands of dollars on their pets for surgery, they don't follow medical advice when they get home. For instance, I know of a pet owner who spent almost $2,000 on their dog that had been run over by a car. It had two broken legs and some severe cuts in the skin and ears. The dog had metal pins and plates inserted in the bones and all the lacerations sutured up. When the dog went home it was supposed to wear an E-collar to keep the tion, one that I often ask pet from chewing out the

As soon as the owners got in the car they took the E-collar off. Not long after they got home the dog chewed out the stitches on the leg that had the metal plate, then, using the other leg, scratched out all the stitches that repaired the ear. Both of these could have been prevented if they had just listened to instructions and left the E-collar on.

Please explain this to me, I see it over and over. I don't are positioned and aligned know what to do? Thank you for your great column. I know that people read it and will listen to you.

A. — That is a great quesmyself. I really wish I had

Your example is just one of many that I can share. One of my favorite stories is very similar to yours. I had a referral from a veterinarian in Key West for a dog that was hit by a car. It had a badly shattered rear leg. After a long surgery and lots of metal implants, the leg was repaired. The dog was actually walking the next day and went home about three days later. An "external fixator" was applied to the broken leg. You may have seen these in people. The metal pins are drilled into the broken pieces of bone and then together, then held in place using a large metal rod that runs down the outside of the leg, being held in place with nuts and bolts like an erector set. This looks very complicated and it is. But it is very effective.

I sent the dog home with an E-collar because I did not want the dog chewing at the metal apparatus. The pet came in seven days later for suture removal and she spent all that money, was trotting up the handicap ramp. It was completely ambulatory and if you did not notice the fixator, you would never know it had a broken leg just eight days before. The owner was ecstatic how well the dog was doing. I removed the sutures in the skin, but instructed her that the dog had to keep the fixator on at hooked the fixator and least eight weeks. She must keep the E-collar on and keep the dog crated so the leg could completely heal.

Well, four days later the owners came racing up from Key West on emergency. The fixator had been pulled out and was hanging by a single pin, dangling by the leg like some bad bling. The bone was crooked and the dog was not able to walk.

The owner was livid — screaming at me stating that the fixator fell off and and it did not work. She demanded that I replace it at my cost.

Her husband fessed up. The owner was so happy with the dog's progress that she took off the E-collar and let it out in the vard to get some exercise. The dog was running along the fence when the gate latch ripped it out of the bone!

The owner paid for the repair. Fortunately, the dog recovered and is doing great.

Bottom line, please follow your veterinarian's advice - keep the E-collar on — it may be inconvenient in the short term but, in the long term, it will be in the pet's best interest.

population has not increased 30 percent since Hurricane Wilma. In fact the population has decreased from 7,163 in 2005 to 6,328 in 2008. This is a decrease of 835 inmates, or a decrease of 12 percent in that time frame.

Regarding your statement that Monroe County has developed a mental-health/ substance abuse commission that puts case workers in pretrial services and the sheriff's office, I think you are confusing this with the Monroe County Criminal Justice, Mental Health and Substance Abuse Diversion Planning Council that has recommended in its strategic plan that case managers and other kinds of clinical/treatment positions be placed in pre-trial services and the jail.

In 2008, Monroe County was awarded a one-year planning grant that established the Monroe County Criminal Justice, Mental Health and Substance Abuse Diversion Council, and the Monroe County Criminal Justice Diversion Project. That grant just ended April 9. Clare Shaw was the director of this project, which was for planning only. In addition to the Jail In-House Program for Substance Abuse treatment, the Care Center for Mental Health, through funding from the Florida Department of Children and Families, provides jail diversion case management and forensic services. assisting inmates with substance abuse and mental health problems in referrals to appropriate treatment and obtaining benefits post-release.

One important correction to make is that Monroe County did not receive a three year, $1 million dollar grant. Originally, the Criminal Justice, Mental Health and Substance Abuse Re-investment Act, House Bill 1477, was created to offer planning grants and implementation grants. However, after the first year, the Legislature did not continue to fund the program, so all of the counties with planning grants were not able to continue on to implement the programs they had planned. The Monroe County project is seeking other federal and state grants to continue the project.

The "connection that was lost in the 1970s" that we discussed was referring to the de-institutionalization of the mentally ill, whereby state hospitals released large number of mentally ill persons back into the community without aftercare services being established in communities. This are going to quote someresulted in large numbers of mentally ill individuals becoming incarcerated.

Thank you again for your interest and support. It is invaluable and appreciated. easily on the Internet.
